district court concluded it lacked jurisdiction to review the agency's reinstatement of a prior order of removal. We agree and AFFIRM.

I.

Plaintiffs' contention that the agency's reinstatement was ineffective is not reviewable by the district court. Fifth Circuit precedent holds that a petition for review before a court of appeals is the "sole and exclusive means for judicial review of an order of removal." Iracheta v. Holder, 730 F.3d 419, 422 (5th Cir. 2013). The Iracheta court likewise reiterates that such "statutory jurisdiction over 'final orders of removal' extends to reinstatement orders." Id. (citing Ojeda–Terrazas v. Ashcroft, 290 F.3d 292, 295 (5th Cir. 2002). Thus, the district court correctly determined that it lacked jurisdiction to review the matter.

Additionally, judicial review of I-485 adjustment of status applications is statutorily prohibited. See Ayanbadejo v. Chertoff, 517 F.3d 273, 276-77 (5th Cir. 2008). The Ayanbadejo court interpreting 8 U.S.C. 1252(a)(2)(B), stated:

[C]ourts are precluded from reviewing those decisions "specified in the statute" to be discretionary. Section 1252(a)(2)(B)(i) explicitly places "any judgment regarding the granting of relief under . . . section 1255," which provides the statutory authority for I-485 applications, in this category of discretionary decisions that no courts have jurisdiction to review. The law makes clear that we and the district court lack jurisdiction over determinations made with respect to an I-485 application for permanent resident status under § 1255. Id. (footnotes omitted).

AFFIRMED.
