we affirm.

Sept contends that the district court violated his due process rights by relying on unreliable hearsay evidence to find that his offense involved physical violence against the victims and by varying upward on that basis. The district court did not abuse its discretion in relying on the victims' hearsay statements regarding Sept's violence against them. See United States v. Berry, 258 F.3d 971, 976 (9th Cir. 2001). Contrary to Sept's contention, the victims' statements, which were consistent with each other and with the statement of one victim's mother and that of a third victim, were sufficiently corroborated to provide the minimum indicia of reliability necessary for consideration at sentencing. See id. at 976-77.
