

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
CENTRAL DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

CAROL FAYE TEITELBAUM,)	CASE NO. CV 10-07167 RZ
)
Plaintiff,)
)	MEMORANDUM OPINION
vs.)	AND ORDER
)
MICHAEL J. ASTRUE, Commissioner) of Social Security,)
)
Defendant.)

After Plaintiff Carol Faye Teitelbaum underwent a hysterectomy in 2007, she progressively developed, she says, an acute sensitivity to her environment. She claims to suffer pain from being around electricity and chemicals, and this condition, she asserts, has made her unable to act as a court reporter as she used to do, or in fact to do any regular job. Her friends and family have told her she is nuts, and they recommended that she see a psychiatrist. A psychologist found that she was depressed as a result of her condition. [AR 297] Having no other avenue to pursue, she filed for disability under the Social Security system; the Administrative Law Judge denied her claim.

The Administrative Law Judge found that the only impairment she had was depression, not otherwise specified, with anxiety features. [AR 16] He stated that Plaintiff's testimony alone could not establish a severe impairment, and that there was little objective evidence of her claimed impairment of multiple chemical sensitivity. [AR 19]

1 He discredited the doctor who made such a diagnosis [AR 20], and, relying on testimony
2 from the vocational expert, he found that, while Plaintiff no longer could function as a
3 court reporter, she could either mark items for sale at a department store or make
4 sandwiches in a restaurant. [AR 21] Hence, he concluded, she was not disabled.

5 In this Court, Plaintiff raises a number of errors, centered around Plaintiff's
6 assertion that she has become unusually sensitive to electricity and chemicals. The 7 diagnosis of a multiple chemical sensitivity is a tricky one, because it is, by its very nature,
8 idiosyncratic and difficult to assess objectively. Still, it is a known diagnosis, having an 9 associated insurance and diagnostic code, and is referenced in several cases. See, e.g., Wall
10 v. Astrue, 2010 WL 2757514 (C.D. Cal. 2010); Owen v. Astrue, 2011 WL 588048 (N.D.
11 Tex. 2011); and Brandenburg v. Astrue, 2010 WL 2621254 (S.D. Oh. 2010). Sometimes 12 it is likened to chronic fatigue syndrome for its mysteriousness and elusiveness. The 13 problem for the Social Security system is how to fit it into the normal sequential
14 evaluation, mindful in particular of Congress' command that disability cannot be 15 established solely on the basis of an individual's statement as to pain or other symptoms.
16 42 U.S.C. § 423(d)(5)(A).

17 A decision of the Administrative Law Judge is to be affirmed if it is backed
18 by substantial evidence and free of legal errors. Drouin v. Sullivan, 966 F.2d 1255, 1257
19 (9th Cir. 1992). Under the law of this circuit, and most circuits, an Administrative Law
20 Judge must give deference to the opinions of treating physicians, and even sometimes give 21 controlling weight to those opinions. Holohan v. Massanari, 246 F.3d 1195, 1201-1203
22 (9th Cir. 2001). The opinions of consulting physicians also deserve respect, but they do
23 not rank as high on the hierarchy as do those of treating physicians. Id.

24 At Step Two of the Sequential Evaluation, an administrative law judge must 25 determine if the claimant has a severe impairment. The regulations do not define a 26 "severe" impairment. Instead, they state what a non-severe impairment is: one that does 27 not significantly limit physical or mental ability to do basic work activities. 20 C.F.R.
28 §§ 404.1521, 416.921. The basic work activities are "the abilities and aptitudes necessary

1 to do most jobs,” including various physical and mental activities. Id. The requirement of 2 having a severe impairment performs a gate-keeping function, screening out frivolous
3 complaints. Bowen v. Yuckert, 482 U.S. 137, 153 (1987). In its internal procedures, the 4 Social Security Administration assesses an impairment as “non-severe” if it has no more
5 than a minimal effect on the individual’s ability to do basic work functions. SSR 85-2.
6 The minimal nature of this requirement, according to the Commissioner’s internal 7 procedures is stated quite directly:

8
9 The Commissioner has stated that “[i]f an adjudicator is unable
10 to determine clearly the effect of an impairment or combination
11 of impairments on the individual’s ability to do basic work
12 activities, the sequential evaluation should not end with the not 13 severe evaluation step.” S.S.R. No. 85-28 (1985). Step two, 14 then, is a “de minimis screening device [used] to dispose of 15 groundless claims,” Smolen, 80 F.3d at 1290, and an ALJ may 16 find that a claimant lacks a medically severe impairment or 17 combination of impairments only when his conclusion is 18 “clearly established by medical evidence.” S.S.R. 85-28.”

19
20 Webb v. Barnhart, 433 F.3d 683, 687 (9th Cir. 2005). This minimalist treatment has 21 received the Courts’ imprimatur. Yuckert v. Bowen, 841 F.2d 303, 306 (9th Cir. 1988);
22 Smolen v. Chater, 80 F.3d 1273, 1290 (9th Cir. 1996). Thus, the requirement that a 23 claimant have a severe impairment has been transmogrified into a requirement that the 24 claimant have an impairment that is not very severe at all — it simply must have more than 25 a minimal effect on his or her ability to do basic work functions. When the Commissioner 26 rests his decision on the failure to satisfy the severity requirement, that decision, as with 27 any other, must rest on substantial evidence within the record. Smolen v. Chater, supra,
28 80 F.3d at 1289-90.

1 The Administrative Law Judge here did not find that Plaintiff had a severe
2 impairment based on multiple chemical syndrome. This is curious, because he found that 3 Plaintiff was depressed, but the evidence of her depression came from a psychologist, who
4 found that she was depressed because of her medical condition of being overly sensitive
5 to her environment. [AR 297] At the same time, however, the psychologist gave no
6 indication that Plaintiff was in any way irrational in feeling such depression as a result of 7 her condition.

8 The Administrative Law Judge stated that an impairment cannot be found on 9 the basis of a claimant's say-so [AR 19], and in this Court the Commissioner reiterates that 10 the statute prohibits the finding of an impairment based solely on the subjective complaints
11 of a claimant. 42 U.S.C. § 423(d)(5)(A). While this is true, the Administrative Law Judge
12 committed the same mistake the Courts have found when chronic fatigue syndrome is 13 involved: "The ALJ erred by 'effectively requir[ing]' objective" evidence for a disease that 14 eludes such measurement.'" Benecke v. Barnhart, 379 F.3d 587, 594 (9th Cir. 2004), citing
15 Green Younger v. Barnhart, 335 F.3d 99, 108 (2d Cir. 2003). While there was not 16 evidence here that could be measured in the way that blood pressure can be measured, there 17 was, in fact, not only the testimony of the claimant, but two other kinds of evidence as 18 well: the treating physicians' assessments, and the testimony of third-party law witnesses.

19 As for the treating physicians, "[d]isability may be proved by medically-20 acceptable clinical diagnoses, as well as by objective laboratory findings." Day v.
21 Weinberger, 522 F.2d 1154, 1156 (9th Cir. 1975). In light of this law, the discrediting of 22 the treating physician's assessments, at least insofar as the presence of a severe impairment
23 was concerned, was not sufficient. The Administrative Law Judge discredited treating 24 physician Dr. Bernhoft for two reasons. First, he said that she had not been specific in 25 describing things to which Plaintiff was sensitive. [AR 20] This was not correct;
26 Dr. Bernhoft identified at least chemicals, scents, molds, electrical stimuli and fluorescent
27 lights as stimuli to which Plaintiff was unusually sensitive. [AR 168] Second, the 28 Administrative Law Judge thought it inconsistent for the physician to have opined that, as

1 a result of Plaintiff's hypersensitivity to her environment, Plaintiff would be precluded
2 from traveling in cars, whereas Plaintiff regularly drove. [AR 20] Plaintiff's driving 3 capabilities, however, were not explored in any nuanced way; for example, she never was 4 asked whether, even though she could drive, it was difficult to drive; or whether there was
5 any progression to sensitivity to being in a car, as there had been with sensitivity to other
6 situations; she did, however, testify that it was difficult to be in traffic with the attendant
7 exhaust and fumes. [AR 29] Thus, even though Plaintiff could and did drive, it is not
8 clear, therefore, that the inconsistency the Administrative Law Judge fastened on was much
9 of an inconsistency, and if it was, it was blown out of proportion, and not a sufficient basis
10 for discrediting the physician.

11 Dr. Heuser also rendered an opinion that Plaintiff suffered from this 12 syndrome. [AR 348] The Administrative Law Judge did not discuss this opinion.

13 In this Court, the Commissioner asserts that, despite the opinion of 14 Dr. Bernhoft, substantial evidence in the form of opinions from two consultants, 15 Dr. Siciariz and Dr. Portnoff, back the decision by the Administrative Law Judge.
16 Dr. Portnoff gave an opinion on Plaintiff's mental capacity, explicitly excluding any impact
17 from multiple chemical sensitivity. [AR 297-98] For his part Dr. Siciariz did say that 18 "from an internal medicine perspective" Plaintiff had no functional limitations [AR 303]
19 However, Dr. Siciariz did not assess whether Plaintiff suffered from multiple chemical 20 sensitivity — which may or may not fall within an "internal medicine perspective" — nor,
21 apparently, did he review any of her records.

22 The reason that the opinion of a treating physician is given preference over 23 that of an examining physician is that the treating physician has a more extended and 24 comprehensive understanding of the patient, based on the treating physician's longitudinal
25 relationship with the patient. Sprague v. Bowen, 812 F.2d 1226, 1230 (9th Cir. 1987). That 26 preference makes a lot of sense here when the examining physician who consulted for 27 Defendant performed a one-time typical physical examination. The consultant was not an 28 expert in the kind of impairment that Plaintiff claimed, but instead was a doctor of internal

1 medicine. Given the elusive nature of multiple chemical sensitivity — which nevertheless 2 can be real — it was error to give preference to the findings of the physical over the 3 opinions of those who had treated the Plaintiff.

4 The other source of evidence was the reports of two third parties. The first
5 was Marcia McCourt. The Administrative Law Judge discredited her, saying:

6
7 Marcia McCourt completed a third party function report on the 8 claimant’s behalf, which is partially credible. She states that the 9 claimant is not the outgoing person that she used to be, and 10 appropriate opinion based on her relationship with the claimant.
11 However, although unable to describe specific symptoms, she 12 also stated that the claimant was sensitive to light and electricity,
13 and this statement is given little weight.

14
15 [AR 19] The Administrative Law Judge did not give a citation to a particular exhibit
16 containing this report. In this Court, Plaintiff assails the Administrative Law Judge’s
17 assessment, and Defendant defends it, but neither party cites to the report in the 18 Administrative Record. Nor has the Court been able to locate the report in the 19 Administrative Record. It is impossible to evaluate the Administrative Law Judge’s
20 statement when the report itself is not present.

21 There is, however, another third party function report in the record, that of 22 Phil Walker. [AR 112-19] The Administrative Law Judge did not address this third party
23 report at all. In this Court, the Commissioner argues that the Administrative Law Judge
24 found Plaintiff not credible, and that Mr. Walker’s report merely corroborates Plaintiff’s
25 position, so “it follows that the ALJ also gave germane reasons for rejecting the third party
26 evidence. Valentine v. Astrue, 574 F.3d 685, 694 (9th Cir. 2009).” Defendant’s
27 Memorandum in Support of Answer 8:4-5. The cases do not support the Commissioner’s 28 position.

1 To begin with, the Commissioner simply cannot ignore third party evidence:
2

3 “[Lay] testimony is competent evidence and ‘cannot be
4 disregarded without comment.’ Nguyen v. Chater, 100 F.3d
5 1462, 1467 (9th Cir. 1996). If an ALJ disregards the testimony
6 of a lay witness, the ALJ must provide reasons ‘that are germane
7 to each witness.’ Id. Further, the reasons ‘germane to each
8 witness’ must be specific. Stout [v. Commissioner], 454 F.3d
9 [1050] at 1054 [9th Cir. 2006] (explaining that ‘the ALJ, not the 10 district court, is required to provide specific reasons for rejecting 11 lay testimony’) (emphasis added).”
12

13 Bruce v. Astrue, 557 F.3d 1113, 1115 (9th Cir. 2009). So the Administrative Law Judge
14 could not remain silent; he was required to address the lay evidence. The Court cannot 15 merely assume that, if he had addressed the evidence, he both would have found it wanting 16 and would have found it wanting on the grounds that the Commissioner urges in this Court.
17 It is equally plausible that the evidence might have given him second thoughts about
18 Plaintiff herself; if a third party (or, apparently two third parties) were witnessing Plaintiff
19 reacting to environmental stimuli in the way that Plaintiff said she was reacting, then
20 perhaps the Administrative Law Judge might have given Plaintiff’s statements more 21 credence. Certainly the Court cannot “confidently conclude that no reasonable ALJ, when 22 fully crediting the testimony, could have reached a different disability determination.”
23 Stout v. Commissioner, Social Security Administration, 454 F.3d 1050, 1056 (9th Cir.
24 2006).

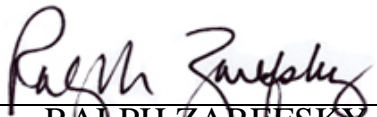

25 The errors discussed here together mean that the Administrative Law Judge’s
26 conclusion that Plaintiff did not show a medically severe impairment based on multiple 27 chemical sensitivity was not “clearly established by medical evidence.” Webb v. Barnhart, 28 433 F.3d 683, 687 (9th Cir. 2005), quoting S.S.R. 85-28. Hence, the case must return to

1 the Commissioner. The Commissioner's delegate may find it appropriate, as he pursues
2 the sequential evaluation, to contact Plaintiff's treating physicians further, or to consult
3 with persons who are expert in the field of environmental sensitivity.

4 The Court's resolution of this matter makes it unnecessary to address other
5 claimed errors, and the Court does not do so. The matter is remanded to the Commissioner.

6 IT IS SO ORDERED.

7
8 DATED: November 3, 2011

9
10
11 _____
12 RALPH ZAREFSKY
13 UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28