MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Pro se plaintiff Alma Augustus brought this action against the Secretary¹ of the United States Army alleging violations of the Administrative Procedure Act ("APA"), 5 U.S.C. §§ 551 et seq., the Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA"), 5 U.S.C. § 552, and the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a.² The parties have each moved for summary judgment under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56. Because the Secretary failed to comply with the procedures prescribed in the Army's regulations when responding to complaints Augustus filed, judgment will be entered for her on her APA claim. Because Augustus either has not factually substantiated her Privacy Act claim or has not presented facts revealing a genuine dispute over the Secretary's evidence disproving her Privacy Act claim, summary judgment will be entered for the Secretary as to that claim. However, because neither party has demonstrated entitlement to summary judgment as to Augustus's FOIA claim, both parties' motions will be denied without prejudice as to that claim.

BACKGROUND

The background of this case is discussed fully in an earlier Memorandum Opinion and Order issued in this case. (See Docket #34, Sept. 29, 2004 Mem. Op. and Order ("Mem. Op.")) In short, Augustus, an African-American woman, was a Lieutenant Colonel in the United States Army National Guard Bureau ("NGB") assigned to active duty as an Automation Officer at the Army National Guard Readiness Center in Arlington, Virginia. (Am. Compl. at 1; see also Mem. Op. at 3.) She claims that she was unlawfully denied a promotion and suffered from other unlawful forms of discrimination and retaliation, including not being considered for the Army's scholarship awards, after she voiced concerns about the NGB's alleged discriminatory personnel policies and procedures. (Am. Compl. at 2-3; see also Pl.'s Mem. of P. & A. in Supp. of Pl.'s Opp'n to Def.'s Summ. J. and Cross Mot. for Summ. J. ("Pl.'s Mem.") at 15.) Although Augustus took steps through informal channels to specify her concerns about NGB's discriminatory practices, she was not promoted and the NGB failed to address her concerns. (Mem. Op. at 5.) She filed a formal equal opportunity ("EO") complaint with the NGB. (Am. Compl. Ex. 3.)

Augustus asserts that the NGB's discriminatory motives underlying its failure to promote her were memorialized in a report of investigation ("ROI") prepared by Major General Peter Gravett in March 2001. (Id. at 5 ¶ 7.) She claims that the ROI "substantiated [her] unlawful gender and race discrimination" claims and recommended that she be promoted retroactively to the rank of Colonel. (Id.) Augustus claims further that Lieutenant General Roger Schultz and Major General James T. Jackson approved a separate ROI and deemed Gravett's ROI procedurally and substantively flawed and disregarded its recommendations. (Mem. Op. at 8.)

On account of the perceived discrimination, Augustus filed three Article 138 complaints³ with the NGB, requesting that it investigate violations of her privacy that allegedly occurred when the NGB's Inspector General's Office ("IG") revealed to Schultz both the discrimination allegations it received confidentially from Augustus and her identity, investigate a threatened reprisal for formally lodging complaints, and investigate allegations that Schultz threatened to take adverse action against her. (Id. at 9-10.) Augustus also asserts that her Privacy Act rights were violated when, among other things, the NGB questioned her -- without providing her with a copy of a Privacy Act statement -- about the NGB's suspicion that she violated the Privacy Act herself. (Id. at 12.) The NGB returned the complaints to her, claiming they were deficient for failure to meet Army regulations.

Augustus filed an eleven-count amended complaint in this court alleging that the United States Army engaged in sex-based and race-based discrimination and took other actions that violated her rights under the Constitution, federal statutes, and internal Army regulations and operating procedures. The Secretary filed a motion to dismiss the amended complaint under Rule 12(b)(1) for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and under Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim for which relief can be granted. The memorandum opinion addressing the defendant's motion to dismiss grouped Augustus's various allegations into eight claims: (1) discriminatory non-promotion (Counts 1, 5, 7, 9, 11); (2) erroneous records (counts 1, 6, 8); (3) failure to investigate Article 138 complaints (Counts 1, 11); (4) procedural inadequacies in investigating her EO complaint (Counts 1, 11); (5) a general atmosphere of discrimination in the Army (Counts 1, 3, 5, 7, 9, 11); (6) violation of FOIA (Count 10); (7) violation of the Privacy Act (Count 6); and (8) retaliation under the Military Whistleblower Protection Act ("MWPA") (Counts 1, 2, 5, 8, 11). (Mem. Op. at 15.) The Secretary's motion to dismiss was granted in part and denied in part, and most, but not all, of Augustus's claims were dismissed for want of subject matter jurisdiction. The Secretary's motion was denied with respect to Augustus's (1) Article 138 claims under the APA; (2) FOIA claim seeking an unredacted copy of Gravett's ROI⁴; and (3) Privacy Act claim for damages, alleging that the defendant invaded her privacy by exceeding the Privacy Act's limitations on collecting information from third parties, failing to publish a record keeping system, and failing to safeguard her private information. The parties have cross-moved for summary judgment as to these remaining claims.

DISCUSSION

Rule 56(c) provides that summary judgment may be granted "if the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). A dispute about a material fact is "genuine . . . if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party."

(internal quotation marks omitted). Facts in dispute are material if they are capable of affecting the outcome of the suit under governing substantive law. Id. In considering a motion for summary judgment, a court must view all evidence and inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts "in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587 (1986).

In opposing a motion for summary judgment "an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of the adverse party's pleading[.]'" Heller v. Fortis Benefits Ins. Co., 142 F.3d 487, 492 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e) (1987)). Rather, "the adverse party's response, by affidavits or as otherwise provided in this rule, must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. If the adverse party does not so respond, summary judgment, if appropriate, shall be entered against the adverse party.'" Id. (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e) (1987)).

I. ARTICLE 138 COMPLAINTS

Augustus alleges that the Army arbitrarily and capriciously failed to follow its own regulations when processing her Article 138 complaints against Schultz, Lieutenant Colonel Mitchell, and the IG, in violation of the APA. An agency's alleged failure to follow its own regulations is reviewable under the APA. See Webster v. Doe, 486 U.S. 592, 602 n.7 (1988). Under the APA, a reviewing court must "hold unlawful and set aside agency action . . . found to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law[.]" 5 U.S.C. § 706.

"The APA [also] provides that, in reviewing agency action, the court 'shall' take account of 'the rule of prejudicial error,' 5 U.S.C. § 706, that is, whether the error caused prejudice."

Nevada v. Dep't of Energy, 457 F.3d 78, 90 (D.C. Cir. 2006). "If the agency's mistake did not affect the outcome, . . . it would be senseless to vacate and remand for reconsideration." PDK Labs. Inc., v. U.S. Drug Enforcement Auth., 362 F.3d 786, 799 (D.C. Cir. 2004).

An Article 138 complaint allows

[a]ny member of the armed forces who believes [her]self wronged by [her] commanding officer, and who, upon due application to that commanding officer, is refused redress, [to] complain to any superior commissioned officer, who shall forward the complaint to the officer exercising general court-martial jurisdiction over the officer against whom it is made.

10 U.S.C. § 938. Only certain wrongs may be righted through the Article 138 complaint process. If "other, more specific channels and procedures . . . ensure the soldier has an adequate opportunity to be heard[,] . . . [then] [t]hose specific procedures" should be used. Id. ¶ 20-5(a). "Article 138 procedures should neither substitute for nor duplicate them.”

Id.⁵

Army Regulation 27-10⁶ sets forth the specific procedures required to file an Article 138 complaint. These require the soldier filing the complaint first to attempt informal communication between herself and her commanding officer, Army Reg. 27-10 ¶ 20-3, and then to file a request for redress, id. ¶ 20-6, before finally filing a formal Article 138 complaint. Id. ¶ 20-7. An Article 138 complaint must contain the identity of the offending commanding officer. Id. ¶ 19-7(a)(5). A complaint may be rejected if it “does not substantially meet the requirements of Article 138 . . . [and] no determination as to the merits of the complaint is required. Unless the deficiency is waived . . . , such a complaint will be returned to the complainant with a written explanation of the deficiency and, if correctable, how it may be corrected.” Id. ¶ 20-10(a)(1).

Augustus claims that the Army failed to comply with ¶ 20-10’s requirement that it provide her a written explanation of the deficiencies in her Article 138 complaints, and that this failure caused her irreparable harm. (Pl.'s Mem. at 6-7, 10.) The Army contends that Augustus's Article 138 complaints were properly processed and determined to be fatally deficient, and that despite the fatal deficiencies in her complaints, the Army nonetheless took steps through appropriate administrative channels to address the substance of her complaints. (Def.'s Mem. of P. & A. in Supp. of Def.'s Mot. for Summ. J. ("Def.'s Mem.") at 6-14; see also A.R. filed on March 5, 2009 ("First A.R."), Tab B at 7-8.⁷)

Augustus's Article 138 complaint against Schultz alleges that Schultz initiated a "[p]rivacy issues investigation against [her in] retaliation, reprisal, and retaliatory harassment for [her] engagement in 'Protected Communications' with the [IG] and an EEO investigation . . . to stop unlawful discrimination against [her]." (First A.R., Tab B at 10; A.R. filed on Nov. 4, 2010 ("Second A.R.") at 6.) The Secretary's brief explains that the Army found Augustus's Article 138 complaint against Schultz to be deficient because Schultz was not Augustus's commanding officer.⁸ (Def.'s Mem. at 9 n.2.) Under 10 U.S.C. § 938, the subject of a soldier's Article 138 complaint must be her commanding officer. See 10 U.S.C. § 938. Though certain deficiencies in Article 138 complaints may be waived, this particular deficiency cannot be waived. See Army Reg. 27-10 ¶ 20-10(b)(3)(b). (See also First A.R., Tab B at 84; Second A.R. at 21.) Augustus's Article 138 complaint against Mitchell alleges that (1) by reporting that Augustus may have obtained personnel documents in violation of the Privacy Act, Mitchell violated Augustus's confidentiality; (2) she was "being threatened with reprisal because of the . . . disclosure of [her] identity and the nature of the information" disclosed; and (3) she was "being threatened with unfavorable personnel action and the withholding of favorable personnel actions regarding [her] EEO complaint[.]" (First A.R., Tab B at 13; Second A.R. at 8.) The Secretary's brief explains that the Army found that Augustus's complaint against Mitchell was fatally deficient because Mitchell was not Augustus's commanding officer, a deficiency like the one in her complaint against Schultz.⁹ (Def.'s Mem. at 11.) See 10 U.S.C. § 938. Finally, Augustus's third Article 138 complaint was filed against the Inspector General's Office seeking "redress of wrongs committed against [her] by the NGB-IG office[.]" (First A.R., Tab B at 12; Second A.R. at 9.) The Secretary's brief explains that this complaint was deficient because it impermissibly named as a respondent an office rather than a commanding officer, and Augustus had not requested redress before filing the complaint. (Def.'s Mem. at 12-13.)¹⁰

⁸ The Secretary's brief also explains that Augustus's Article 138 complaint against Schultz was deficient because Augustus's alleged injuries were subject to review under alternative administrative procedures, including reprisal for protected communications with the IG. (Def.'s Mem. at 9.) Any reprisal for communicating with the IG is subject to review under 10 U.S.C. § 1034. Army Regulation 27-10 explicitly informs that reprisal allegations should be reported under 10 U.S.C. § 1034, rather than brought as an Article 138 complaint. Army Reg. 27-10 ¶ 20-5(b)(3).

On April 17, 2001, Jackson wrote a memorandum to Augustus returning her Article 138 complaints to her with the following explanation: "Your complaints, pursuant to Article 138, UCMJ, and [Army Regulation] 27-10, Chapter 20, are deficient. Accordingly, they are returned without action." (First A.R., Tab C at 826-28; Second A.R. at 2; see also id. at 21 (exempting reviewing officers from making a determination on a deficient complaint).) The memorandum also announced that because the complaints

⁹ The Secretary's brief also explains that Augustus's complaint was deficient because she reportedly failed to submit a request for redress before filing the complaint. (Def.'s Mem. at 11.)

"include allegations of misconduct by a General Officer and various Inspectors General," copies of the complaints would be forwarded to the Department of the Army Inspector General for appropriate investigation and action under Army Reg. 20-1 ¶ 7-3(h), (i). (Second A.R. at 2.) Jackson also attached as an enclosure to the memorandum an information paper that the Secretary claims "outlin[es] the proper procedures for filing an Article 138 complaint."¹¹ (Def.'s Mot. for Summ. J. at 10; see also First A.R., Tab C at 826, Second A.R. at 4.)¹²

Army Regulation 27-10 ¶ 20-10(a)(1) requires the Army to provide a complainant a written explanation of any deficiency in any Article 138 complaint that is rejected for failure to substantially meet the requirements of Article 138, and a written explanation of how the deficiency can be corrected if it is correctable. (Second A.R. at 21.) What seems obvious is that the language of the regulation seeks to avoid an explanation that simply says "your complaint is deficient. Go read the rules and figure out why." Jackson's letter did just that. The Secretary's brief, on the other hand, provided fairly fulsome explanations for the deficiencies found in the three Article 138 complaints. It provided, though, no justification for why those detailed explanations were not provided in Jackson's letter. Nor did the Secretary's brief cite any authority supporting the terse Jackson language as adequate to satisfy the required level of explanation. The undisputed material facts reveal that the Army's letter to Augustus was not in accordance with its own regulations. Accordingly, judgment will be entered for Augustus on her Article 138 claims brought under the APA. However, since the Secretary's brief provides her with the explanations to which she was originally entitled for why her complaints were deficient, and the original failure to supply the explanations did not affect the decision to reject the complaints as deficient, no further relief is warranted.

¹² The Secretary deemed Jackson's letter to be final agency action within the meaning of the APA, 5 U.S.C. § 704. (See First A.R., Ex. 1 at 4.) However, the parties' briefs do not analyze this issue. In determining whether an agency action is final, courts consider if "its impact is 'direct and immediate,' Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 796-97 (1992); whether the action 'mark[s] the consummation of the agency's decisionmaking process,' Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 178 (1997); and whether the action is one by which 'rights or obligations have been determined, or from which legal consequences will flow.'" Colo. Farm Bureau Fed'n v. U.S. Forest Serv., 220 F.3d 1171, 1173-1174 (10th Cir. 2000) (internal citation omitted). Because "[t]he requirement of final agency action is not jurisdictional[.]" Trudeau v. Fed. Trade Comm'n, 456 F.3d 178, 184 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (emphasis in original) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted), and the Secretary has not raised this defense, it is waived. See, e.g., Hinton v. Corr. Corp. of Am., 623 F. Supp. 2d 61, 63 n.2 (D.D.C. 2009).

II. FOIA/PRIVACY ACT CLAIMS SEEKING GRAVETT'S ROI

Augustus seeks, under FOIA and the Privacy Act, an unredacted copy of Gravett's ROI that was drafted for the purpose of investigating her discrimination claims. She asserts that the ROI the Army produced contained "tens of thousands of unlawful[ly] redacted items" and that because a "[Privacy Act]/FOIA request gives [her] more substantial rights than just a FOIA request[,]" she is entitled to an unredacted copy of the ROI. (Pl.'s Mem. at 7-8, 10-13.) The defendant opposes Augustus's request for an unredacted copy of the ROI, stating that the Army lawfully redacted certain information "under FOIA exemptions applicable to release of agency records[]" (Def.'s Suppl. Response ("Def.'s Suppl.") at 2 (emphasis in original).)¹³

A. FOIA

Under FOIA, "'a federal agency must disclose agency records unless they may be withheld pursuant to one of the nine enumerated exemptions listed in § 552(b).'" Clemmons v. U.S. Army Crime Records Ctr., Civil Action No. 05-02353 (RCL), 2007 WL 1020827, at *5 (D.D.C. Mar. 30, 2007) (quoting U.S. Dep't of Justice v. Julian, 486 U.S. 1, 8 (1988)). Because, however, FOIA "'calls for broad disclosure of Government records[,]' . . . courts have construed the exemptions to FOIA very narrowly to allow for a greater dissemination of information." Id. (quoting CIA v. Sims, 471 U.S. 159, 167 (1985)).

¹³ The Secretary initially withheld the ROI on the basis of the deliberative process privilege under FOIA, but later withdrew the privilege as a basis for withholding the ROI. (Def.'s Suppl. Response ("Def.'s Suppl.") at 7 n.4.)

The Secretary asserts that the "government has properly withheld the redacted information in order to protect the privacy of the individuals with whom Plaintiff had discussed her allegations and about whom Plaintiff has made allegations" and that Augustus has neither submitted waivers from these individuals nor "offered a public interest that would overcome the privacy interests at stake." (Def.'s Suppl. at 17.) The defendant invokes FOIA exemptions 6 and 7(C) (id. at 6),¹⁴ which exempt the government from having to disclose (1) "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy;" and (2) "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes, but only to the extent that the production of such law enforcement records or information . . . could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6), (7)(C).

In redacting the information from Gravett's ROI, the Army grouped the redacted information into the following categories: names and identifying information of witnesses interviewed during the course of the ROI investigation; personal information of the investigation officer and panel members; names and identifying information of individuals against whom allegations were made; names and identifying information of third parties; and social security numbers of individuals identified in the investigation.¹⁵ (Def.'s Response to Pl.'s Mot. to Compel Production of a Vaughn Index ("Def.'s Response to Pl.'s Mot. to Compel"), Decl. of Davin Blackborrow ("Blackborrow Decl.,")) ¶ 10.) The Secretary relies on the declaration of Davin Blackborrow to explain the agency's decision to redact the names and personal information.¹⁶ (See id.) In the declaration, Blackborrow states that a "coded format [was] used . . . to assist the Court and Plaintiff in reviewing the information withheld within the context of the documents themselves." (Id.) He explains further that "[e]ach instance of information withheld pursuant to the FOIA on the attached documents is accompanied by a coded designation that corresponds to the categories" defined by the agency. (Id.)

¹⁴ The Secretary also invokes exemption 5 of FOIA (see Def.'s Suppl. Response at 6), but in a declaration offered in support of its response to Augustus's motion to compel production of a Vaughn index, an attorney in the Department of the Army, Office of the General Counsel, stated that he did not "identif[y] any information that could be withheld under FOIA Exemption 5[.]" Because the defendant's declaration did not rely on FOIA Exemption 5, Exemption 5 will not be discussed.

The administrative record, however, falls short of the detailed process that the agency purports to have taken in redacting the documents. The record does not include coded designations by each redaction that correspond to the agency's reasons for withholding the information. In fact, there are few, if any, numbers placed next to the redacted information that would help explain the information -- such as the names and identifying information of individuals against whom allegations were made -- redacted from any particular document. It is unclear from the administrative record that information such as names and personal information are, indeed, the information withheld under the claimed exemption. There is no basis upon which to conclude that the Army properly withheld the redacted information in compliance with FOIA exemptions 6 and 7(C). See, e.g., Banks v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, 700 F. Supp. 2d 9, 16 (D.D.C. 2010) (finding agency's Vaughn index and record inadequate where the Vaughn index did not discuss the nature or type of information withheld and it was unclear from the record that the information was withheld on the basis the agency claimed). Thus, the Secretary's motion for summary judgment will be denied without prejudice as to this issue, and the defendant will be directed to file a copy of the redacted ROI reflecting coded designations that correspond to the agency's Vaughn index. Augustus's motion as to this issue also will be denied without prejudice.

B. Privacy Act

The Privacy Act provides an individual with access to government records that pertain to her which are contained in a system of records and allows the individual to review and have a copy made of all or any portion of the records. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d). The Act, however, provides certain exemptions and exceptions. See id. § 552a(d)(5). These include exemptions that prevent disclosure of information compiled in reasonable anticipation of a civil action or proceeding and of investigatory material compiled for law enforcement purposes.¹⁷ See id. § 552a(k)(2).

The threshold issue, however, is whether the Gravett ROI was maintained in a system of records under the Privacy Act because "the determination that a system of records exists triggers virtually all of the other substantive provisions of the Privacy

¹⁷ The Secretary raises both of these exemptions as the basis for providing Augustus with a redacted version of the ROI. (See Def.'s Suppl. at 6 ("*W*e have determined that these records were produced in reasonable anticipation of litigation regarding your complaint." (emphasis in original)); 15 ("Pursuant to the authority to exempt systems of records under the Privacy Act, . . . the Army has exempted General Legal Files from the requirements of the Privacy Act." (citing Army Reg. 340-21, The Army Privacy Program ¶ 5-5(g)).) Augustus, meanwhile, contends that the ROI is not protected by the privilege protecting information compiled in anticipation of litigation because "[t]he Defendant never established a nexus or reasonable basis for the claim of work-product privilege[.]" (Pl.'s Response to Def.'s Suppl. at 5.) She states that the exemption does not apply because "'civil action or proceedings' is intended to include court proceedings, preliminary judicial steps, and quasi-judicial administrative hearings or proceedings" and "Gravett was acting in the capacity of an investigating officer . . . [who] 'is not bound by the rules of evidence for trials by courts-martial or for court proceedings generally.'" (Id. at 6-7.)

Act, such as an individual's right to receive copies[.]” Henke v. U.S. Dep't of Commerce, 83 F.3d 1453, 1459 (D.C. Cir. 1996).

“The Privacy Act defines ‘system of records’ to mean ‘a group of any records under the control of any agency from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particular assigned to the individual.’” Lee v. Geren, 480 F. Supp. 2d 198, 206-07 (D.D.C. 2007) (quoting 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(5)).

“‘[R]etrieval capability is not sufficient to create a system of records; the agency must in practice retrieve information by personal identifier.’” Id. at 207 (emphasis in original) (quoting McCready v. Nicholson, 465 F.3d 1, 17 (D.C. Cir. 2006)).

“Given the statutory language ‘is retrieved,’ the ‘agency’s actual retrieval practice and policies’ are what matter[.]” Id. (quoting Henke, 83 F.3d at 1460-61).

The Secretary initially withheld the entire ROI on the ground that it was not maintained in a system of records under the Privacy Act. A memorandum issued by Principal Deputy General Counsel for the Army Avon N. Williams, III (the “Williams memorandum”), however, stated “that the requested information is maintained in a [Privacy Act] system of records[.]” namely, the AR600-20 NGB Equal Opportunity Investigative Files (“AR600-20 NGB”). (Def.’s Suppl. at 6; First A.R., Tab A at 1254.) The Secretary was ordered to clarify the inconsistency. In response, the Army submitted a supplemental memorandum, including a declaration of Patricia Smith, the Equal Opportunity and Diversity Officer for the Army National Guard. Smith stated that the Williams memorandum was incorrect and that the ROI was not maintained in AR600-20 NGB or any other Privacy Act system of records. (Def.'s Suppl., Ex. 1, Patricia Smith Decl. ("Smith Decl.") ¶ 4 ("Previous statements that the ROI was maintained in AR600-20 NGB are incorrect and are the result of an absence of direct coordination with the NGB EO office during Plaintiff's [administrative] FOIA appeal.")) She added that the Army does not maintain in a system of records incomplete or inaccurate records. (Id. ¶ 12 (citing C.F.R. 310.5).) According to Smith, because the investigation was not complete and the ROI was not legally sufficient for procedural and substantive reasons, the ROI was not maintained in any system of records. (Id. ¶¶ 11, 12 (citing C.F.R. 310.5).) Smith cited a letter sent from the NGB Chief Legal Counsel stating that the ROI did not comply with the Army's EO complaint processing system because it was not made in writing and under oath (Def.'s Suppl., Ex. 1, Memorandum Chief, Nat'l Guard Bureau ¶ 3(d)); that the ROI's findings and recommendations were not supported by the investigative record because, among other things, it did not include key information, such as the complainant's position or personnel files (id. ¶ 4(e)); that a number of witnesses did not review or sign their statements (id. ¶ 5(e)); and that the ROI was silent on possible remedies to the problem of preferential treatment for white male officers. (Id. ¶ 6(d).)

Augustus, meanwhile, asserts that the ROI is maintained in a system of records. For support, she cites Department of Defense ("DoD") Directive 7050.6, which requires that "[a] copy of the documents acquired during the investigation and summaries of witness testimony shall be transmitted to the member or former member if he or she requests them." (Pl.'s Am. Response to Def.'s Suppl. at 4 (internal quotation marks omitted).) However, the cited DoD directive language says nothing about whether the ROI is maintained in a system of records for Privacy Act purposes. Augustus does nothing else to rebut the Secretary's evidence that the ROI was not maintained in a system of records. She does not demonstrate that Gravett's ROI is a record that can be retrieved by name, social security number or any other personal identifier. Nor does she demonstrate that any actual repository for the ROI qualifies as a system of records. Because Augustus has failed to support her argument that the ROI was maintained in a system of records, her motion for summary judgment will be denied as to this issue and the Secretary's motion will be granted.

III. DAMAGES UNDER THE PRIVACY ACT

Augustus seeks damages under the Privacy Act, alleging injuries caused when the defendant (1) collected information about her from third parties; (2) failed to publish notice of its record keeping system; and (3) failed to safeguard her private information. Under the Privacy Act, “[p]laintiff bears the burden of proving that the agency’s action in violating the Privacy Act was intentional or willful.” Djenasevic v. Exec. U.S. Attorney’s Office, 579 F. Supp. 2d 129, 136 (D.D.C. 2008) (citing Albright v. United States, 732 F.2d 181, 189 (D.C. Cir. 1984) and § 552a(g)(4)). “This means that the government is not liable for every affirmative or negligent act that technically violates the Privacy Act[.]” Alexander v. FBI, 691 F. Supp. 2d 182, 192 (D.D.C. 2010) (citing Laningham v. U.S. Navy, 813 F.2d 1236, 1242 (D.C. Cir. 1987)). “‘Instead, the violation must be so ‘patently egregious and unlawful that anyone undertaking the conduct should have known it unlawful.’” Id. (quoting Laningham, 813 F.2d at 1242 (quoting Wisdom v. HUD, 713 F.2d 422, 425 (8th Cir. 1983))). “To meet [this] burden, plaintiff ‘must prove that the offending agency acted without grounds for believing its actions lawful or that it flagrantly disregarded the rights guaranteed under the Privacy Act.” Djenasevic, 579 F. Supp. 2d at 136 (internal quotation marks and alterations omitted). This standard is high and requires “a showing of ‘something greater than gross negligence’ on the agency’s part.” Id. (quoting Tijerina v. Walters, 821 F.2d 789, 799 (D.C. Cir. 1987)).

- A. Privacy Act limitations on collecting information from third parties

Section 552a(e)(2) of the Privacy Act "requires federal agencies that maintain systems of records to 'collect information to the greatest extent practicable directly from the subject individual when the information may result in adverse determinations about an individual's rights, benefits, and privileges under Federal programs.'" Thompson v. Dep't of State, 400 F. Supp. 2d 1, 8 (D.D.C. 2005) (quoting § 552a(e)(2)). This section "was designed to discourage the collection of personal information from third party sources and therefore to encourage the accuracy of Federal data gathering." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). This "reflects congressional judgment that the best way to ensure accuracy in general is to require the agency to obtain information directly from the individual whenever practicable." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). In determining whether an agency has violated § 552a(e)(2), "courts must weigh the interests of both accuracy and privacy[.]" Thompson, 400 F. Supp. 2d at 9.

Augustus alleges that the Secretary violated § 552a(e)(2) in several ways.¹⁸ (See Pl.s' Mem. at 14-16.) First, she alleges that the Army violated the Privacy Act by collecting information from Colonels Dan Costner and Marilyn Muzny who "fraudulently generated a DA Form 4187 . . . to prevent her from receiving a new job assignment."¹⁹ (Pl.'s Mem. at 14.) The form to which Augustus refers is a personnel action form completed by Costner, which states on its face that it is to be "[u]sed by [a] soldier . . . when requesting a personnel action on his/her own behalf." (First A.R., Tab A at 302.) It appears that Augustus, herself, should have completed the form. However, the Secretary states -- and Augustus does not dispute -- that "the form may also be used by a unit to indicate the change in duty status of a soldier or to request a change in duty status." (Def.'s Opp'n at 6 (citing Army Reg. 600-8-6 ¶ 2-4).) In this case, Costner completed the form in order to support his request to extend Augustus "in place for an additional year." (First A.R., Tab A at 301.) Moreover, Augustus fails to demonstrate that the information contained in information from third parties or showing what the nature of the information gathered was to demonstrate that it was not impracticable for the Secretary to collect the information from her directly. See 5 U.S.C. § 552a(e)(2).

the form resulted in an adverse determination about her rights, benefits and privileges. Her bare allegation that "she did not receive a new job assignment as a result of the collection of the third party information on [her]" (Pl.'s Opp'n at 14), does not trigger the defendant's obligation to collect information from her. See 5 U.S.C. § 552a(e)(2).

Augustus also claims that the Secretary violated the Privacy Act by providing inaccurate third party information about her to the NGB Senior Service College ("SSC") Selection Board.²⁰ However, Augustus offers no evidentiary support for this claim. She identifies a number of individual documents in the record -- many of which merely announce the availability of scholarships and describe the Army's policies for evaluating the applicants (see, e.g., First A.R., Tab A at 351-54, 371-75) -- but fails to demonstrate or even allege that these documents were maintained in any system of records. Also, Augustus does not point to any specific information about her in the record that was provided to the SSC Selection Board. (See Pl.'s Opp'n at 15-16.)

Finally, Augustus claims, without support, that the Army violated the Privacy Act when Byrd interviewed her "regarding allegations of improper promotions among officers" (Pl.'s Opp'n at 17) without providing her with a Privacy Act Statement. The Secretary responds that Augustus does not identify what Privacy Act right is violated. (Def.'s Mem. at 18.) Army Regulation 340-21 requires that a Privacy Act statement be provided to an individual whenever "personal information is requested from an individual that will become part of a system of records retrieved by reference to the individual's name or other personal identifier[.]" Army Reg. 340-21 ¶ 4-2. Aside from her bare allegations that the Army violated the Privacy Act by collecting information from her in its investigation of improper promotions, Augustus provides no evidence reflecting that the interviews and corresponding documents compiled during the investigation constitute or are maintained in a system of records for the purpose of the Privacy Act or otherwise demonstrating that a Privacy Act statement was necessary under these circumstances. "It is insufficient to respond to a motion for summary judgment with argument and no facts[.]" McCready v. Principi, 297 F. Supp. 2d 178, 193-94 (D.D.C. 2003) (reversed in part on other grounds) (citing Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248), and there are no genuinely disputed material facts that must be resolved by a trial. The Secretary's motion will be granted as to this issue and Augustus's motion will be denied.

B. Failure to publish a record-keeping system

Under § 552a(e)(4), "[e]ach agency that maintains a system of records [must] . . . publish in the Federal Register upon establishment or revision a notice of the existence and character of the system of records[.]" 5 U.S.C. § 552a(e)(4). Augustus states that "all instances of disclosure of unlawfully collected and maintained information [about her] . . . constitute[] a failure to publish a record keeping system" and that Gravett's ROI and the "NGB-IG and the DoD-IG database" are "systems of records where unlawful information was collected and maintained from or about [her] in more than one hundred and fifty [thousand] separate violations of [her] Privacy Act rights." (Pl.'s Mem. at 19.) The Secretary argues that "plaintiff's bare allegation fails to allege any specific facts demonstrating a violation of the Privacy Act" and that Augustus "does not identify the records for which the Army purportedly failed to publish a record keeping system." (Def.'s Mem. at 19.) The Secretary has demonstrated that the Gravett ROI was not maintained in a system of records, and Augustus has not put forward any evidence or facts to support her contention that the NGB-IG and DoD-IG databases are systems of records for the purpose of the Privacy Act. Augustus therefore has not demonstrated any genuine dispute over whether the Army maintained the ROI in a system of records. Summary judgment will be granted for the Secretary on Augustus's § 552a(e)(4) claim.

C. Failure to safeguard Augustus's private information

Under § 552a(e)(10) of the Privacy Act, federal agencies are required to maintain systems of records to establish appropriate administrative, technical and physical safeguards to insure the security and confidentiality of records and to protect against any anticipated threats or hazards to their security or integrity which could result in substantial harm, embarrassment, inconvenience, or unfairness to any individual on whom information is maintained.

§ 552a(e)(10). Thus, "[a]gencies subject to the Privacy Act must establish 'appropriate administrative, technical, and physical safeguards' to ensure the security and confidentiality of the 'private information under their charge.'" Alexander v. FBI, 691 F. Supp. 2d 182, 191-92 (D.D.C. 2010) (quoting 5 U.S.C. § 552a(e)(10)).

Augustus claims that the Secretary's agents violated her Privacy Act rights "when they unlawfully collected information . . . , maintained the unlawful information in a system of record[s], and disclosed the information that described how [she] exercise[d] her First Amendment rights." (Pl.'s Mem. at 19-20.) Plaintiff further claims that the "record . . . contains and demonstrates more than one hundred and fifty thousand instances of the Defendant's failure to safeguard private information [about her] that the Defendant unlawfully maintained in a system of record[s] and disclosed to third parties." (Id. at 20.) The Secretary contends that Augustus has not established that the disclosures constitute records subject to Privacy Act protections. (Def.'s Mem. at 19.) Augustus again fails to provide facts to support her argument that the personal information was maintained in a system of records and points to no specific places in the record to support her claim of unlawful disclosure. Because reciting bare allegations is not enough to survive a motion for summary judgment, Anderson, 477 U.S. at 249, the Secretary's motion will be granted as to this issue and Augustus's motion will be denied.

CONCLUSION AND ORDER

There are no material factual disputes regarding Augustus's APA claim, and judgment will be entered in her favor and against the Secretary on that claim. Because Augustus has not presented facts reflecting a genuine dispute regarding Augustus's Privacy Act claim, the Army has carried its burden of demonstrating that it is entitled to summary judgment and judgment will be entered in favor of the Secretary and against Augustus as to that claim. However, with respect to Augustus's FOIA claim for an unredacted copy of the ROI, both parties' motions will be denied without prejudice and the Secretary will be directed to submit a copy of the ROI that reflects the coding system identified in his Vaughn index. Accordingly, it is hereby

ORDERED that the Secretary's motion [#60] for summary judgment is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART. Judgment is
