MEMORANDUM

Bartle, C.J.

May 18, 2011

Before the court are the motions to consolidate the above cases before Judge Timothy J. Savage for the purpose of deciding the pending motions of plaintiffs to remand these actions to the Court of Common Pleas of Philadelphia County. The defendant opposes the motions.

Plaintiff in each case sued SmithKline Beecham Corp. d/b/a GlaxoSmithKline ("GSK") in the state court for personal injuries related to defendant's drugs Paxil paroxetine hydrochloride ("Paxil") or Paxil CR ("Paxil CR") (collectively

"Paxil") prescribed to treat depression, obsessive-compulsive disorder, panic disorders, social anxiety, post-traumatic stress disorder, and generalized anxiety disorder in adults. Defendant thereafter removed these cases to this court on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Plaintiffs, all citizens of Pennsylvania, thereafter filed motions to remand on the ground that the principal place of business of GSK was in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania and not in Delaware where GSK is incorporated. Plaintiffs argue that GSK's nerve center is in Philadelphia. See, Hertz Corp. v. Friend, --- U.S. ---, 130 S. Ct. 1181 (2010).

In the fall of 2010, similar motions to consolidate were filed in connection with six Paxil cases brought against GSK. After review of the complaints and approval of the judges to whom those six cases were randomly assigned, the undersigned, in his capacity as Chief Judge, consolidated them by an Order dated October 7, 2010 before Judge Timothy J. Savage for the purpose of deciding the remand motions only. The consolidation before one judge was clearly in the interest of judicial economy since the remand issue was identical in each case, the defendant was the same in each case, and plaintiffs had alleged the same type of claim for relief in each. Significantly at that time, Judge Savage had not decided any remand motion in a Paxil case.¹

We now have before us another wave of Paxil cases with motions to remand. The remand issue is the same here as in the earlier cases. The issue of conserving scarce judicial resources is even more compelling than in the fall of 2010, now that there are 21 actions for decision.

We disagree with defendant that it is unfair to transfer the motions to Judge Savage, who is extremely familiar with the issue involved and has already ruled on the motions in other Paxil cases. We note that there was no outcry from defendant or plaintiffs when the first consolidation order was entered. We see no basis for an outcry now. Of course, the situation might be different if Judge Savage had decided a remand motion before the initial consolidation order, and a party appeared to be engaged in judge shopping in seeking to have subsequent remand motions placed before him. That, however, is not what is happening here. Simply because Judge Savage ruled on the earlier remand motions, when his rulings occurred after the court's October 7, 2010 consolidation order, is not a valid reason to refrain from consolidating the pending motions before him.

The undersigned has advised each judge that he or she is free to retain any assigned case for all purposes and specifically to determine the remand motion rather than having it determined by Judge Savage. None has chosen to do so.

Accordingly, the above actions will be consolidated before Judge Timothy J. Savage for purposes of deciding the remand motions only.
