THE PEOPLE,

Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

RICHARD LEIGH WYATT,

Defendant and Appellant.

C056249

(Super. Ct. No. 07F1009)

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Shasta County, Jack H. Halpin, J. Affirmed.

John F. Schuck, under appointment by the Court of Appeal, for Defendant and Appellant.

Edmund G. Brown Jr., Attorney General, Dane R. Gillette, and Michael P. Farrell, Assistant Attorneys General, Carlos A. Martinez and Marcia A. Fay, Deputy Attorneys General, for Plaintiff and Respondent.

* Pursuant to California Rules of Court, rule 8.1110, this opinion is certified for publication with the exception of part III of the DISCUSSION.

Following the denial of his motion to suppress evidence, a jury found defendant Richard Leigh Wyatt guilty of possessing paraphernalia (a syringe) and possessing or manufacturing a weapon (a metal shank) while in jail. (Pen. Code, §§ 4573.6, 4502, subd. (a); undesignated section references are to the Penal Code.) In a bifurcated proceeding, the trial court found true allegations defendant served two prior prison terms (§ 667.5, subd. (b)) and had two serious or violent felony convictions within the meaning of the three strikes law (§ 1170.12).

The trial court refused to dismiss either of defendant's prior strike convictions and sentenced him to an aggregate term of 50 years to life in prison, consisting of 25 years to life for possessing the syringe and 25 years to life for possessing or manufacturing the shank. The court stayed defendant's sentence on the two prior prison term enhancements.

Defendant appeals, contending the trial court erred in (1) denying his motion to suppress statements he made to a Shasta County Sheriff's deputy while in jail, (2) failing to instruct the jury that it must find "each element of a crime" true beyond a reasonable doubt, and (3) denying his motion to dismiss one or both of his prior strike convictions. Finding no error, we shall affirm.

DISCUSSION

I

A. Procedural Background and Facts

Defendant moved in limine to suppress statements he made during an interview with Deputy Mark Davis on January 15, 2007. (§ 1538.5.) Viewed in the light most favorable to the trial court's denial of the motion (People v. Jenkins (2000) 22 Cal.4th 900, 969), the evidence introduced at the suppression hearing was as follows:

On January 8, 2007, defendant was incarcerated at the Shasta County Jail. Deputies searched his cell and found a syringe and a metal shank. Defendant was "accused of violating the following rule(s) or regulation(s): poss[ession] of syringe, shank, [and] contraband, extortion, gambling, [and] fighting." He was advised of the charges against him and that he may be subject to a variety of penalties, including criminal prosecution, as a result of the charges. He was also advised of the "INMATE RIGHTS IN DISCIPLINE PROCEDURE," which included the right to "receive 24 hour prior notice of" a disciplinary hearing, the right to "receive a copy of the Incident Report within 24 hours of the completed report," the right to be present at the hearing, the right to call witnesses at the hearing, and the right to represent oneself or be represented by a staff member at the hearing.

According to the hearing report, defendant declined to waive a disciplinary hearing, and one was held on January 10, 2007. Defendant was present at the hearing and indicated he

"wish[ed] to have [an] attorney present in case criminal proceedings [we]re brought forth." The hearing officer noted defendant "refuse[d] [to make a] statement due to being in [a] criminal investigation" and found defendant "guilty by report." The hearing officer recommended defendant spend 30 days in "lockdown" and lose all privileges.

Five days later, on January 15, 2007, Deputy Davis brought defendant into an interview room at the jail and read defendant his Miranda rights. (Miranda v. Arizona (1966) 384 U.S. 436 [16 L.Ed.2d 694] (Miranda)). Defendant agreed to waive his rights, and Davis questioned him about the items found in his cell. Defendant admitted possessing the syringe and shank.

In his motion to suppress, defendant argued his request to have counsel present at the disciplinary hearing on January 10, 2007, constituted an invocation of his Fifth Amendment right to counsel under Miranda, and thus, Deputy Davis was precluded from "re-questioning" defendant on "the same set of facts" on January 15, 2007, pursuant to Edwards v. Arizona (1981) 451 U.S. 477 [68 L.Ed.2d 378] (Edwards). The People opposed the motion, arguing the disciplinary hearing was not a "custodial interrogation" for purposes of Miranda, and thus, Deputy Davis was not precluded from questioning defendant on January 15, 2007. Alternatively, the People argued defendant did not have a Fifth Amendment right to counsel at a disciplinary hearing, and thus, could not have invoked that right. The trial court tentatively ruled the disciplinary hearing was an administrative hearing and not a custodial interrogation. The court also found defendant did not invoke his right to counsel at the hearing because he did not have a right to counsel at the hearing. Thus, the court concluded, "the [January 15, 2007] interview was properly conducted, provided . . . defendant was then provided all his Miranda rights." The court later affirmed its tentative ruling and denied the motion to suppress.

At trial, Deputy Davis testified he spoke to defendant on January 15, 2007, and after being advised of and waiving his Miranda rights, defendant admitted the syringe recovered from his cell was his and said he used it to inject methamphetamine. Defendant also stated he obtained a piece of metal from another cell, sharpened it into a shank, and had it for protection.

Defendant testified in his own defense. He had approximately five bunkmates during the time he was housed in the cell in which the items were found. He admitted telling Deputy Davis the syringe was his. He did so because he thought the deputies might "give [him] a special visit" with his fiancé and to avoid being labeled a "snitch." He denied telling Davis the shank was his. Rather, he told Davis, "That's definitely not mine. I don't know nothing about that shank."

On appeal, defendant contends the disciplinary hearing constituted a custodial interrogation for purposes of Miranda because his "alleged possession of the syringe and the shank could readily subject him to criminal prosecution in addition to jail sanctions." He claims he invoked his Fifth Amendment rights to counsel and to remain silent when he requested an attorney at the hearing and thereafter refused to make a statement. Having invoked those rights, he asserts Deputy Davis was precluded from questioning him on January 15, 2007, even after advising him of his Miranda rights. As we will explain, his argument fails on the merits.

B. Legal Analysis

"In considering a claim that a statement or confession is inadmissible because it was obtained in violation of a defendant's rights under Miranda[], we accept the trial court's resolution of disputed facts and inferences, and its evaluation of credibility, if supported by substantial evidence. (People v. Kelly (1990) 51 Cal.3d 931, 947 [275 Cal.Rptr. 160, 800 P.2d 516].) Although we independently determine whether, from the undisputed facts and those properly found by the trial court, the challenged statements were illegally obtained (ibid.), we "give great weight to the considered conclusions" of a lower court that has previously reviewed the same evidence.' (People v. Jennings (1988) 46 Cal.3d 963, 979 [251 Cal.Rptr. 278, 760 P.2d 475], quoting Miller v. Fenton (1985) 474 U.S. 104, 112 [88 L.Ed.2d 405, 412, 106 S.Ct. 445]; accord, People v. Kelly, supra, 51 Cal.3d at p. 947.)" (People v. Wash (1993) 6 Cal.4th 215, 235-236, followed in People v. Whitson (1998) 17 Cal.4th 229, 248.)

Defendant contends his statements to Deputy Davis were obtained in violation of the rights guaranteed him by Edwards, supra, 451 U.S. 477 [68 L.Ed.2d 378]. For reasons that follow, we disagree.

The facts in Edwards are described by the Supreme Court as follows:

"On January 19, 1976, a sworn complaint was filed against Edwards in Arizona state court charging him with robbery, burglary, and first-degree murder. An arrest warrant was issued pursuant to the complaint, and Edwards was arrested at his home later that same day. At the police station, he was informed of his rights as required by Miranda []. Petitioner stated that he understood his rights, and was willing to submit to questioning. After being told that another suspect already in custody had implicated him in the crime, Edwards denied involvement and gave a taped statement presenting an alibi defense. He then sought to 'make a deal.' The interrogating officer told him that he wanted a statement, but that he did not have the authority to negotiate a deal. The officer provided Edwards with the number of a county attorney. Petitioner made the call, but hung up after a few moments. Edwards then said, 'I want an attorney before making a deal.' At that point, questioning ceased and Edwards was taken to county jail.

"At 9:15 the next morning, two detectives, colleagues of the officer who had interrogated Edwards the previous night, came to the jail and asked to see Edwards. When the detention officer informed Edwards that the detectives wished to speak with him, he replied that he did not want to talk to anyone. The guard told him that 'he had' to talk and then took him to meet with the detectives. The officers identified themselves, stated they wanted to talk to him, and informed him of his Miranda rights. Edwards was willing to talk, but he first wanted to hear the taped statement of the alleged accomplice who had implicated him. After listening to the tape for several minutes, petitioner said that he would make a statement so long as it was not tape recorded. The detectives informed him that the recording was irrelevant since they could testify in court concerning whatever he said. Edwards replied, 'I'll tell you anything you want to know, but I don't want it on tape.' He thereupon implicated himself in the crime." (Edwards, supra, 451 U.S. at pp. 478-479 [68 L.Ed.2d at pp. 388-389], fns. omitted.)

The Supreme Court held that defendant Edwards's statements should have been suppressed. (Edwards, supra, 451 U.S. 477, 487 [68 L.Ed.2d at p. 388].) The court held that "it is inconsistent with Miranda and its progeny for the authorities, at their instance, to reinterrogate an accused in custody if he has clearly asserted his right to counsel." (Id. at p. 485 [68 L.Ed.2d at p. 387] (italics added)).

As is obvious, Edwards applies only where defendant has "clearly" asserted his right to counsel.

"The applicability of the 'rigid' prophylactic rule' of Edwards requires courts to 'determine whether the accused actually invoked his right to counsel.' (Smith v. Illinois, supra, at p. 95 [83 L.Ed.2d 488, 105 S.Ct. 490] (emphasis added), quoting Fare v. Michael C. (1979) 442 U.S. 707, 719 [61 L.Ed.2d 197, 99 S.Ct. 2560].) To avoid difficulties of proof and to provide guidance to officers conducting interrogations, this is an objective inquiry. (See Connecticut v. Barrett, supra, at p. 529 [93 L.Ed.2d 920, 107 S.Ct. 828].) Invocation of the Miranda right to counsel 'requires, at a minimum, some statement that can reasonably be construed to be an expression of a desire for the assistance of an attorney.' (McNeil v. Wisconsin 501 U.S. 178 [115 L.Ed.2d 158, 111 S.Ct. 2204].) But if a suspect makes a reference to an attorney that is ambiguous or equivocal in that a reasonable officer in light of the circumstances would have understood only that the suspect might be invoking the right to counsel, our precedents do not require the cessation of questioning. (See ibid.) ('[T]he likelihood that a suspect would wish counsel to be present is not the test for applicability of Edwards'); Edwards [], supra, at 485 [68 L.Ed.2d 378, 101 S.Ct. 1880] (impermissible for authorities 'to reinterrogate an accused in custody if he has clearly asserted his right to counsel') (emphasis added).)

Moreover, for purposes of Miranda and its progeny, a request for counsel "requires, at a minimum, some statement that can reasonably be construed to be an expression of a desire for the assistance of an attorney in dealing with custodial interrogation by the police." (McNeil v. Wisconsin (1991) 501 U.S. 171, 178 [115 L.Ed.2d 158, 169] (McNeil)).)

Here, to be sure, defendant requested counsel at the disciplinary hearing, but the circumstances of the request made the request ambiguous with respect to whether it would apply to a subsequent, independent custodial interrogation. This is so because the United States Supreme Court has squarely held that a prisoner is not entitled to representation by either retained or appointed counsel at prison disciplinary hearings. (Baxter v. Palmigiano (1976) 425 U.S. 308, 315 [47 L.Ed.2d 810, 819].) Moreover, the in-prison disciplinary hearing was not a custodial interrogation within the meaning of Miranda and McNeil, supra, 501 U.S. 171, for the simple reason that, so far as the record discloses, defendant was not asked any questions and remained silent. Accordingly, when defendant requested counsel at the disciplinary hearing, he asserted a right that did not exist in that setting.

Did defendant's request for counsel at the disciplinary hearing constitute a request for counsel in the altogether different setting of a custodial interrogation? In our view, the situation was, at best, objectively ambiguous, particularly as the law enforcement authorities must have viewed it. Law enforcement authorities are lawfully permitted to "clarify" whether a suspect intends to remain silent, and to invoke his Miranda rights, where a defendant's request for counsel is ambiguous. (Davis, supra, 512 U.S. at p. 461 [129 L.Ed.2d at p. 373]; People v. Simons, supra, 155 Cal.App.4th at p. 958.) This is precisely what Deputy Davis did on January 15, 2007, when he summoned defendant to an interview room and read him his Miranda rights. At that time, the deputy advised defendant, inter alia, that he had the right to remain silent and the right to have an attorney appointed for him and to have the attorney present during questioning. Defendant waived his Miranda rights.

By advising defendant of his Miranda rights, and by obtaining a knowing and voluntary waiver of the same, Deputy Davis lawfully clarified the ambiguous request for counsel that defendant had made at the disciplinary hearing. This was lawful and did not violate the rule of Edwards, supra, 451 U.S. 477 [68 L.Ed.2d 278]. (People v. Simons, supra, 155 Cal.App.4th at p. 958.)

Viewing this case from a distance, as one might look at it from a satellite, we are confident that our result is just. There is simply no objectionable police conduct in this case. Unlike in Edwards, supra, 451 U.S. 477, defendant did not object to meeting with Deputy Davis on January 15. Unlike in Edwards, defendant was not told that he had to talk to Deputy Davis. Application of the Edwards rule in this case would elevate form over substance and would constitute a miscarriage of justice. We will not do it.

The trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress the statements he made to Deputy Davis.

II

The trial court instructed the jury in the language of Judicial Council of California Criminal Jury Instructions (2008 (CALCRIM)), CALCRIM No. 220 (reasonable doubt), in pertinent part as follows: "A defendant in a criminal case is presumed to be innocent. This presumption requires that the People prove the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Whenever I tell you the People must prove something, I mean they must prove it beyond a reasonable doubt."<sup>1</sup>

Defendant claims this instruction was insufficient because it failed to inform the jury that it was required to find "each element of a crime" true beyond a reasonable doubt. We disagree.

Under the United States Constitution and California law, the government must prove each element of a charged offense beyond a reasonable doubt. (Victor v. Nebraska (1994) 511 U.S. 1, 5 [127 L.Ed.2d 583, 590]; People v. Cole (2004) 33 Cal.4th 1158, 1208; § 1096.) Whether an instruction correctly conveys this standard must be determined by examining the instruction in

<sup>1</sup> As given to the jury, CALCRIM No. 220 states in its entirety: "The fact that a criminal charge has been filed against the defendant is not evidence that the charge is true. You must not be bias[ed] against the defendant just because he has been arrested, charged with a crime, or brought to trial. [¶] A defendant in a criminal case is presumed to be innocent. This presumption requires that the People prove a defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Whenever I tell you the People must prove something, I mean they must prove it beyond a reasonable doubt. [¶] Proof beyond a reasonable doubt is proof that leaves you with an abiding conviction that the charge is true. The evidence need not eliminate all possible doubt because everything in life is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. [¶] In deciding whether the People have proved their case beyond a reasonable doubt, you must impartially compare and consider all the evidence that was received throughout the entire trial. Unless the evidence proves the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, he's entitled to an acquittal and you must find him not guilty."

the context of all the instructions, given the jury. (Victor v. Nebraska, supra, 511 U.S. at p. 5; see People v. Cain (1995) 10 Cal.4th 1, 36.)

Under these standards, we see no instructional error. In giving CALCRIM No. 220, the trial court told the jury: "Whenever I tell you the People must prove something, I mean they must prove it beyond a reasonable doubt." The jury also received versions of CALCRIM Nos. 2745 and 2748, which define the elements of possession or manufacture of a weapon in a penal institution and possession of paraphernalia in a penal institution. Each instruction states, "To prove that the defendant is guilty of this crime, the People must prove that:" and then lists the separate elements of the offense. In addition, the jury received CALCRIM No. 361, which concerns the evaluation of a defendant's failure, if any, to explain or deny adverse evidence against him, and states: "The People must still prove each element of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt." Accordingly, CALCRIM No. 220, viewed together with other instructions, correctly informed the jury that the prosecutor was obliged to prove each element of the crimes beyond a reasonable doubt.

III

Finally, defendant argues the trial court abused its discretion in failing to dismiss at least one of his two prior strike convictions because "although very close, [he] had not yet fallen within the dark spirit of the 'strikes' law . . . ." Again, we disagree.

While the trial court has the power to dismiss a strike conviction (People v. Superior Court (Romero) (1996) 13 Cal.4th 497, 529-530), an appellate court will not disturb the trial court's ruling denying defendant's request to dismiss his strike conviction absent an affirmative showing of an abuse of discretion. (People v. Carmony (2004) 33 Cal.4th 367, 376.) Under this standard, the inquiry is whether the ruling in question "is so irrational or arbitrary that no reasonable person could agree with it." (Id. at p. 377.)

Given defendant's criminal history and the circumstances of the current offenses, we find the court's decision not to dismiss either of defendant's prior strike convictions was well within the bounds of reason. Defendant, who was born in 1969, has the following criminal record: a 1984 juvenile adjudication for receiving or concealing stolen property, for which he was committed to the California Youth Authority (CYA); a 1986 juvenile adjudication for burglary, for which he was committed to CYA; a 1990 conviction for theft, for which he was placed on 12 months' probation and ordered to serve one day in jail; a 1991 conviction for fraudulently receiving welfare benefits of over $400, for which he was placed on 36 months' probation and ordered to serve 60 days in jail; 1996 convictions for driving under the influence of alcohol and failing to appear in court, for which he was placed on 5 years' probation and ordered to serve seven days in jail; 1998 convictions for robbery, first degree burglary, and second degree burglary, for which he was ordered to serve six years in prison; 2000 convictions for driving on a suspended or revoked license and receiving stolen property, for which he was placed on 48 months' probation and ordered to serve 20 days in jail; a 2001 conviction for second degree burglary, for which he was ordered to serve five years in prison; and 2007 convictions for "crimes related to his possessing firearms," for which he was sentenced to 26 years in prison. As the trial court noted, the current offense was serious and part of a pattern of criminal activity. In addition to a syringe, defendant possessed a sharpened metal shank, which he indicted he kept for protection. While defendant did not use the shank, his possession of it posed a danger to other inmates and personnel at the jail.

That the two prior strike convictions -- 1998 convictions for robbery and first degree burglary -- arose out of a single incident did not mandate the dismissal of one or both. (People v. Benson (1998) 18 Cal.4th 24, 36.) Given defendant's conduct after those strikes, the trial court acted well within its discretion in not dismissing either of them. Nor was the trial court compelled to dismiss one or both of his prior strike convictions based on his long-term drug abuse, divorce, or troubled childhood.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in failing to strike one or both of defendant's prior strike convictions. (See People v. Carmony, supra, 33 Cal.4th at p. 380.)
