Plaintiffs-Appellants,

v.

MERCK & CO., INC.,

Defendant-Appellee.

----- X

Before: SACK, LIVINGSTON, and LOHIER, Circuit Judges.

Appeal by the plaintiffs from a decision of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Keenan, J.), concluding that the statute of limitations for the plaintiffs' product liability claims, brought under Virginia law, was not tolled by the filing of a putative federal class action that raised identical claims, and dismissing the plaintiffs' claims as time-barred. Based on the answers of the Supreme Court of Virginia to our certified questions, we affirm the judgment of the District Court.

7 LOHIER, Circuit Judge:

8 We return to consider this consolidated appeal in light of the answers provided by the 9 Supreme Court of Virginia in Casey v. Merck & Co. (“Casey III”), 722 S.E.2d 842 (Va. 2012),
10 in response to questions that we certified to it in Casey v. Merck & Co. (“Casey II”), 653 F.3d 95
11 (2d Cir. 2011).<sup>1</sup> In In re Fosamax Prods. Liab. Litig. (“Casey I”), 694 F. Supp. 2d 253, 259
12 (S.D.N.Y. 2010), the District Court granted summary judgment in favor of defendant Merck
13 Sharp & Dohme Corporation (“Merck”), formerly known as Merck & Co., Inc., dismissing as 14 time-barred the plaintiffs’ product liability claims for injuries allegedly caused by Fosamax, a 15 prescription drug manufactured by Merck.

16 On appeal, the plaintiffs argued that the statute of limitations was tolled by the filing of a
17 federal class action in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee that 18 alleged similar injuries and raised similar claims. We determined that state law controlled the 19 availability of tolling in this context and certified two questions regarding equitable and statutory 20 cross-jurisdictional tolling to the Supreme Court of Virginia. Casey II, 653 F.3d at 104.

21 The Supreme Court of Virginia answered both of our questions in the negative,
22 concluding that “Virginia recognizes neither equitable nor statutory tolling due to the pendency
23 of a putative class action in another jurisdiction.” Casey III, 722 S.E.2d at 846. In light of this
24 response, we affirm the judgment of the District Court.

1 BACKGROUND

2 We assume familiarity with the underlying facts and procedural history of this case,
3 which are set forth in our previous opinion, Casey II, and we recount them here only as 4 necessary to explain our disposition of this appeal.

5 Merck manufactures Fosamax, a prescription drug, used to treat osteoporosis, that falls
6 within a class of drugs that has allegedly been linked to osteonecrosis—bone death—of the jaw.
7 The plaintiffs assert exclusively Virginia state law claims. They do not dispute that Virginia’s
8 two-year statute of limitations applies to their claims or that they filed their actions more than 9 two years after they were first injured.<sup>2</sup>

10 A federal class action on behalf of a nationwide class of plaintiffs who allegedly suffered
11 personal injuries due to the use of Fosamax, captioned Wolfe v. Merck & Co., No. 3:05-0717
12 (M.D. Tenn.), was filed in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee
13 in September 2005, before the plaintiffs filed their individual suits. The putative class action
14 included “[a]ll persons who consume or have consumed FOSAMAX, whether intravenously or 15 by mouth.” That action was transferred to the Southern District of New York by the Judicial 16 Panel on Multidistrict Litigation. In re Fosamax Prods. Liab. Litig., 444 F. Supp. 2d 1347, 1350
17 (J.P.M.L. 2006). The District Court denied the motion for class certification on January 3, 2008,

<sup>2</sup> Plaintiff Rebecca Quarles was prescribed and took Fosamax for roughly six months starting in 2002. She was diagnosed with loss of jaw bone and failed dental implants in 2003, and she sued Merck in 2007. Dorothy Deloriea was prescribed and took Fosamax in 1999, and she developed osteomyelitis and osteonecrosis of the jaw in 2004. She commenced her action against Merck in 2008. Ora Casey began taking Fosamax in 2000 and was diagnosed with osteonecrosis of the jaw in 2004. She died three years later, in December 2007, and her estate initiated this action in 2008. Roberta Brodin was prescribed and took Fosamax beginning in February 2001 and was diagnosed with osteonecrosis of the jaw in 2005. She initiated her action in 2007.

1 In re Fosamax Prods. Liab. Litig., 248 F.R.D. 389, 404 (S.D.N.Y. 2008),<sup>3</sup> and entered a formal
2 order dismissing all putative class action claims on January 28, 2008, In re Fosamax Prods. Liab.
3 Litig., No. 1:06-md-1789 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 28, 2008) (order dismissing class claims). Merck
4 concedes, at least for purposes of appeal, that the plaintiffs would have been members of the 5 certified class had the District Court certified the proposed nationwide class.

6 On June 23, 2009, Merck moved for summary judgment in Casey I, contending that the 7 plaintiffs' actions were untimely under Virginia's two-year statute of limitations for personal
8 injury actions. In response, the plaintiffs claimed that the Wolfe putative class action, which was 9 filed within the two-year limitation period, tolled the running of the Virginia statute of 10 limitations on their individual actions because they would have been members of the proposed
11 class had certification been granted. The District Court granted Merck's motion, concluding that 12 the filing of the Wolfe putative class action did not toll Virginia's limitations period for the 13 plaintiffs' state law claims. Casey I, 694 F. Supp. 2d at 259.

14 On appeal in Casey II, we considered the applicability of the class action tolling doctrine
15 established in American Pipe & Construction Company v. Utah, 414 U.S. 538 (1974), to state
16 law causes of action and held that "a federal court evaluating the timeliness of state law claims
17 must look to the law of the relevant state to determine whether, and to what extent, the statute of 18 limitations should be tolled by the filing of a putative class action in another jurisdiction." 653
19 F.3d at 100. Having determined that the availability of tolling was governed by state law, we <sup>3</sup> The motions for class certification filed before the District Court sought to certify three statewide classes defined to include all current and former users of Fosamax in the states of Pennsylvania, Florida, and Louisiana who had not been diagnosed with osteonecrosis of the jaw. In re Fosamax Prods. Liab. Litig., 248 F.R.D. at 391.

1 turned to Virginia law. The Supreme Court of Virginia had never previously addressed the
2 question of whether Virginia law would allow for an equitable or statutory cross-jurisdictional
3 tolling rule. Although the Fourth Circuit had predicted, in Wade v. Danek Medical, Inc., 182
4 F.3d 281, 287 (4th Cir. 1999), that the Supreme Court of Virginia would not adopt an equitable 5 rule of cross-jurisdictional tolling for federal class actions, we determined that the 6 persuasiveness of this opinion had been undermined by several post-Wade decisions, including
7 the Supreme Court of Virginia’s decision in Welding, Inc. v. Bland County Service Authority,
8 541 S.E.2d 909 (Va. 2001). Casey II, 653 F.3d at 103. We therefore certified the following two
9 questions to the Supreme Court of Virginia:

10 (1) Does Virginia law permit equitable tolling of a state statute of 11 limitations due to the pendency of a putative class action in 12 another jurisdiction?
13

14 (2) Does Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-229(E)(1) permit tolling of a state
15 statute of limitations due to the pendency of a putative class action
16 in another jurisdiction?
17

18 Id. at 104.<sup>4</sup>

19 DISCUSSION

20 The Supreme Court of Virginia accepted the certified questions and answered both in the 21 negative. Addressing the first question, the court noted that it “is well-established that statutes of 22 limitations are strictly enforced.” Casey III, 722 S.E.2d at 845 (quotation marks omitted).
23 Further, “[a] statute of limitations may not be tolled, or an exception applied, in the absence of a 24 clear statutory enactment to such effect.” Id. (quotation marks omitted). Relying on those

<sup>4</sup> Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-229(E)(1) provides that “if any action is commenced within the prescribed limitation period and for any cause abates or is dismissed without determining the merits, the time such action is pending shall not be computed as part of the period within which such action may be brought, and another action may be brought within the remaining period.”

1 principles, the court concluded that “there is no authority in Virginia jurisprudence for the 2 equitable tolling of a statute of limitations based upon the pendency of a putative class action in
3 another jurisdiction.” Id.

4 As for our second question, the Supreme Court of Virginia explained that, in order for a
5 statute of limitations to be tolled for a subsequent action under Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-229(E)(1), 6 “the party who brought the original action must be the same as the plaintiff in the subsequent 7 action or a recognized representative of that plaintiff asserting the same cause and right of 8 action.” Id. at 846. In addition, because class actions are not recognized under Virginia law, “a
9 class representative who files a putative class action is not recognized as having standing to sue
10 in a representative capacity on behalf of the unnamed members of the putative class. Thus, . . .
11 there is no identity of parties between the named plaintiff in a putative class action and the 12 named plaintiff in a subsequent action filed by a putative class member individually.” Id.
13 Accordingly, the Supreme Court of Virginia held that Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-229(E)(1) “does not
14 toll the statute of limitations for unnamed putative class members due to the pendency of a 15 putative class action in another jurisdiction.” Id.

16 The plaintiffs’ arguments on appeal relied exclusively on their contention that the statute
17 of limitations should have been tolled during the pendency of the Wolfe putative class action.
18 The Supreme Court of Virginia has now confirmed that, under Virginia law, neither Virginia’s 19 tolling statute nor equitable principles provide for cross-jurisdictional tolling under these 20 circumstances. Its decision requires us to affirm the District Court’s grant of summary judgment
21 on the ground that the plaintiffs’ claims are time-barred.
22

1 CONCLUSION

2 For the foregoing reasons, we AFFIRM the judgment of the District Court. We thank
3 the Supreme Court of Virginia for its assistance in construing these tolling principles under 4 Virginia law.
