2 Appeal from a judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of 3 New York (Cedarbaum, J.) dismissing a putative securities class action brought under §§ 11, 4 12(a)(2), and 15 of the Securities Act on behalf of all persons who acquired certain mortgage-5 backed certificates issued under the same allegedly false and misleading shelf registration 6 statement, but sold in 17 separate offerings by 17 unique prospectus supplements. The district 7 court dismissed plaintiff’s class action for lack of standing and for failure to allege a cognizable 8 injury under § 11. We hold that plaintiff has class standing to assert the claims of purchasers of 9 certificates backed by mortgages originated by the same lenders that originated the mortgages 10 backing plaintiff’s certificates, because such claims implicate “the same set of concerns” as 11 plaintiff’s claims. Gratz v. Bollinger, 539 U.S. 244, 267 (2003). We further hold that plaintiff 12 need not plead an out-of-pocket loss in order to allege a cognizable diminution in the value of an 13 illiquid security under § 11.

35 BARRINGTON D. PARKER, Circuit Judge:

36 Sections 11, 12(a)(2), and 15 of the Securities Act of 1933 impose essentially strict 37 liability for material misstatements contained in registered securities offerings. See 15 U.S.C. § 38 77k, l(a)(2), o. This appeal requires us to consider a plaintiff’s standing to assert claims on

1 behalf of purchasers of securities issued under the same allegedly false and misleading SEC
2 Form S-3 and base prospectus (together, the “Shelf Registration Statement”), but sold in separate 3 offerings by unique prospectus supplements and free writing prospectuses (together, the 4 “Prospectus Supplements”) (collectively, the “Offering Documents”).

5 We hold that plaintiff has class standing to assert the claims of purchasers of certificates 6 backed by mortgages originated by the same lenders that originated the mortgages backing 7 plaintiff’s certificates, because such claims implicate “the same set of concerns” as plaintiff’s 8 claims. Gratz v. Bollinger, 539 U.S. 244, 267 (2003). We further hold that plaintiff need not 9 plead an out-of-pocket loss in order to allege a cognizable diminution in the value of an illiquid 10 security under § 11. Accordingly, we affirm in part and vacate in part the judgment of the 11 district court and remand with instructions to reinstate plaintiff’s §§ 11, 12(a)(2), and 15 claims 12 to the extent they are based on similar or identical misrepresentations in the Offering Documents 13 associated with certificates backed by mortgages originated by the same lenders that originated 14 the mortgages backing plaintiff’s certificates.

15 BACKGROUND¹

16 Plaintiff NECA-IBEW Health & Welfare Fund (“NECA” or the “Fund”) sued alleging 17 violations of §§ 11, 12(a)(2), and 15 of the Securities Act on behalf of a putative class consisting ¹ The following facts, viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiff, are drawn from the Third Amended Complaint (unless otherwise noted), documents incorporated by reference into it, and matters of which we may take judicial notice. Chambers v. Time Warner, Inc., 282 F.3d 147, 153 (2d Cir. 2002). We assume those facts to be true unless conclusory or contradicted by more specific allegations or documentary evidence. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678-79 (2009); L-7 Designs, Inc. v. Old Navy, LLC, 647 F.3d 419, 422 (2d Cir. 2011).

1 of all persons who acquired certain mortgage-backed certificates (the “Certificates”)
2 underwritten by defendant Goldman Sachs & Co. and issued by defendant GS Mortgage 3 Securities Corp. (“GS Mortgage”). The Certificates were sold in 17 separate Offerings through 4 17 separate Trusts pursuant to the same Shelf Registration Statement, but using 17 separate 5 Prospectus Supplements. NECA alleges that the Shelf Registration Statement contained false
6 and misleading statements that were essentially repeated in the Prospectus Supplements. NECA 7 bought Certificates issued from only two of the Offerings, but asserts class claims putatively on 8 behalf of purchasers of Certificates from each tranche of all 17 Offerings.²

9 The Certificates

10 The Certificates are securities backed by pools of residential real estate loans acquired by 11 GSMC through two primary channels: (1) the “Goldman Sachs Mortgage Conduit Program” (the 12 “Conduit Program”), and (2) bulk acquisitions in the secondary market. Under the Conduit 13 Program, GSMC acquired loans from a variety of sources, including banks, savings-and-loans 14 associations, and mortgage brokers. Major originators of the loans in the Trusts included
15 National City Mortgage Co. (“National City”) (six Trusts); Countrywide Home Loans

² Defendants include Goldman Sachs, which underwrote the Certificate Offerings and helped draft and disseminate the Offering Documents; Goldman Sachs Mortgage Company (“GSMC”), a wholly-owned subsidiary of Goldman Sachs that purchased the loans underlying the Certificates from various loan originators and other third-parties, and then pooled and conveyed those loans to GS Mortgage; GS Mortgage, a wholly-owned subsidiary of GSMC that securitized the loans and issued the Certificates through the 17 Trusts; and three current or former officers of GS Mortgage. Plaintiff asserts § 11 claims against all defendants; § 12(a)(2) claims against Goldman Sachs as underwriter and GS Mortgage as issuer; and § 15 claims against Goldman Sachs, GSMC, and the three officers as “control persons.”

1 (“Countrywide”) (five Trusts); GreenPoint Mortgage Funding, Inc. (“GreenPoint”) (five Trusts);
2 Wells Fargo Bank (“Wells Fargo”) (four Trusts); SunTrust Mortgage (“SunTrust”) (three 3 Trusts); and Washington Mutual Bank (“WaMu”) (two trusts).

4 Each Certificate represents a “tranche” of a particular Offering, providing its holder with 5 an ownership interest in principal and/or interest payments from the pool of loans within the 6 Trust through which it was issued. Each tranche has a different risk profile, paying a different 7 rate of interest depending on the expected time to maturity and the degree of subordination, or 8 protection against the risk of default.

9 In October 2007, NECA purchased $390,000 of the Class A2A Certificates of the GSAA
10 Home Equity Trust 2007-10 (the “2007-10 Certificates”) directly from Goldman Sachs in a 11 public offering. In May 2008, it purchased approximately $50,000 of the Class 1AV1
12 Certificates from Group 1 of the GSAA Home Equity Trust 2007-5 (the “2007-5 Certificates”).³ 13 The Certificates’ Offering Documents contained numerous disclaimers, including one which 14 warned that:

15 Your Investment May Not Be Liquid[.] The underwriter intends to 16 make a secondary market in the offered certificates, but it will have no 17 obligation to do so. We cannot assure you that such a secondary market 18 will develop or, if it develops, that it will continue. Consequently, you 19 may not be able to sell your certificates readily or at prices that will enable 20 you to realize your desired yield.

21 2007-05 Prospectus Supplement at S-50; 2007-10 Prospectus Supplement at S-35.

³ The Prospectus Supplement for the 2007-5 Offering offered 42 separate classes of Certificates, divided into “Group 1” and “Group 2,” with each group backed by a different loan pool. The Class 1AV1 Certificates purchased by NECA were in Group 1.

1 Shelf Registrations

2 The shelf registration process enables qualified issuers to offer securities on a continuous 3 basis by first filing a shelf registration statement and then subsequently filing separate prospectus
4 supplements for each offering. See 17 C.F.R. § 230.415. The shelf registration statement 5 includes a “base” or “core” prospectus that typically contains general information, including the 6 types of securities to be offered and a description of the risk factors of the offering. See 17 7 C.F.R. § 230.430B; Securities Offering Reform, Securities Act Release No. 33-8591, 70 Fed.
8 Reg. 44,722, 44,770-44,774 (Aug. 3, 2005). It will generally not include transaction-specific 9 details – such as pricing information, or information regarding the specific assets to be included 10 in the vehicle from which the securities are issued – which is contained instead in the prospectus 11 supplements. See 17 C.F.R. § 229.512(a)(1).

12 By regulation, each new issuance requires amending the shelf registration statement, 13 thereby creating a “new registration statement” for each issuance, id. § 229.512(a)(2), that is 14 “deemed effective only as to the securities specified therein as proposed to be offered,” 15
15 U.S.C. § 77f(a). “Amendments” to the shelf registration statement include the prospectus 16 supplements unique to each offering. See 17 C.F.R. § 229.512(a)(2) (“[E]ach . . . post-effective 17 amendment [to the shelf registration statement, such as a prospectus supplement] shall be 18 deemed to be a new registration statement relating to the securities offered therein, and the 19 offering of such securities at that time shall be deemed to be the initial bona fide offering 20 thereof.”); Finkel v. Stratton Corp., 962 F.2d 169, 174 (2d Cir. 1992) (“[Section] 229.512(a)(2), 21 operating in the context of securities offered pursuant to the post-effective registration, deems

1 the offering date to be the post-effective registration date, not the initial [shelf] registration
2 date.”). The representations in the shelf registration statement are simply deemed to be made 3 again at the effective date. Thus, each of the 17 Offerings that NECA seeks to challenge is 4 registered pursuant to a separate registration statement consisting of the same Shelf Registration 5 Statement and a unique Prospectus Supplement.

6 The Misrepresentations

7 In this suit, commenced in December 2008, NECA alleges that the Offering Documents 8 contained false and misleading information about the underwriting guidelines of the mortgage 9 loan originators, the property appraisals of the loans backing the Trusts, and the risks associated 10 with the Certificates.⁴ For example, NECA alleges that the following statements, contained 11 within the Shelf Registration Statement common to the registration statements of all 17 Trusts’ 12 Certificates, were materially misleading:

- 13 • That for the mortgage loans generally, “[t]he lender . . . applies the underwriting 14 standards to evaluate the borrower’s credit standing and repayment ability” and “makes a 15 determination as to whether the prospective borrower has sufficient monthly income 16 available (as to meet the borrower’s monthly obligations on the proposed mortgage loan 17 and other expenses related to the mortgaged property . . .)” and that certain other types of 18 loans “are underwritten on the basis of a judgment that mortgagors or obligors will have 19 the ability to make the monthly payments required initially.”

⁴ NECA also alleges that the Shelf Registration Statement’s assurance that defendants “reasonably believe[] that . . . the [Certificates] will be investment grade securities at the time of sale” was misleading because the ratings – which were based on outdated assumptions, relaxed ratings criteria, and inaccurate loan information – were themselves inaccurate, false, and misleading. It further alleges that defendants should have disclosed that, at the same time they were selling the Certificates as “investment grade” instruments, Goldman Sachs was placing exotic bets via credit-default swaps that residential mortgages similar to those backing the Certificates would default.

- 1 • That for loans purchased through the Conduit Program, “the originating lender makes a 2 determination about whether the borrower’s monthly income (if required to be stated) 3 will be sufficient to enable the borrower to meet its monthly obligations on the mortgage 4 loan and other expenses related to the property.”
- 6 • That loan originators represented to GS Mortgage that the “documents . . . submitted for 7 loan underwriting were not falsified and contain no untrue statement of material fact” and 8 that “[n]o fraud, error, omission, misrepresentation, negligence or similar occurrence 9 with respect to a mortgage loan has taken place on the part of any person.” 10
- 11 • That loan originators represented to GS Mortgage that “[each] mortgage file contains an 12 appraisal . . . by a qualified appraiser . . . whose compensation is not affected by the 13 approval or disapproval of the mortgage loan” and that “[a]ll appraisals must . . . conform 14 to the Uniform Standards of Professional Appraisal Practice [(“USPAP”)] adopted by the 15 Appraisal Standards Board of the Appraisal Foundation” and that “[t]he appraisal 16 generally will be based upon a market data analysis of recent sales of comparable 17 properties.”

19 The Prospectus Supplements for many of the individual Offerings contained similar, generic 20 misrepresentations. For example, the Prospectus Supplement for the 2007-10 Trust stated, with 21 respect to the Conduit Program, that “[t]o the best of [GSMC’s] knowledge, there was no fraud 22 involved in the origination of any Mortgage Loan by the mortgagee or the mortgagor, any 23 appraiser or any other party involved in the origination of the Mortgage Loan.” 2007-10 24 Prospectus Supplement at S-77.

25 Contrary to these representations, plaintiff alleges, neither defendants nor the loan 26 originators they used through the Conduit Program employed standards aimed at determining the 27 borrowers’ ability to repay their loans. Instead, at the time the loans in the Trusts were 28 originated (2006-2007), “there were wide-spread, systematic problems in the residential lending 29 industry” wherein “loan originators began lending money to nearly anyone – even if they could 30 not afford to repay the loans – ignoring their own stated lending underwriting guidelines . . . as

1 well as those of defendants' Conduit program." J.A. at 214. The statements in the Shelf
2 Registration Statement were rendered misleading, NECA alleges, by the Offering Documents' 3 failure to disclose that the originators of the loans backing the Trusts falsely inflated (or coached 4 borrowers falsely to inflate) their income; steered borrowers to loans exceeding their borrowing 5 capacity; and approved borrowers based on "teaser rates" knowing they would be unable to 6 afford payments once the rates adjusted. NECA further alleges that the originators allowed non-7 qualifying borrowers to be approved for loans they could not afford under exceptions to the 8 underwriting standards based on so-called "compensating factors" when such "compensating 9 factors" did not exist or did not justify the loans. Nor, allegedly, did the Offering Documents 10 disclose that appraisers were ordered by loan originators to give predetermined, inflated 11 appraisals to ensure loan approval; that the "comparable properties" used to generate appraisals 12 were not comparable; and that property appraisals did not, in fact, conform to USPAP.⁵ As a 13 result of these abusive practices, NECA alleges, approximately 35%-40% of the loans in the 14 2007-5 Trust and 30-35% of the loans in the 2007-10 Trust were made with no determination of 15 the borrower's ability to repay. And at least 47% of the loans in the 2007-5 Trust, and at least 16 41% of those in the 2007-10 Trust, were based on property value appraisals that were inflated by 17 9% or more.

18 Although NECA's claims are based in part on these general allegations of an industry-19 wide deterioration in loan origination practices, its most particularized allegations tie the abusive

⁵ Because the loan-to-value ("LTV") ratios reported in the Prospectus Supplements were calculated using these false and inflated property appraisals, plaintiff alleges, the LTV ratios were also inaccurate, false, and misleading.

1 practices outlined above to the 17 Trusts' six major loan originators: National City, 2 Countrywide, GreenPoint, Wells Fargo, SunTrust, and WaMu. For example, with respect to 3 Countrywide, NECA alleges that former Countrywide employees have admitted that they were 4 incentivized to increase loan origination without concern for whether borrowers were able to 5 repay the loans. Countrywide's Sales Training Facilitator Guide actually instructed originators 6 to "look for ways to make the loan rather than turn it down." Id. at 217. According to former 7 managers, Countrywide was "infested" with employees that ignored company underwriting 8 standards, and "[i]f you had a pulse, [Countrywide] gave you a loan." Id. at 217-218. In the 9 "few cases" when Countrywide employees actually obtained income documentation 10 demonstrating a borrower's inability to qualify for a loan, Countrywide ignored the 11 documentation and the loan was re-submitted as a stated income loan – with an inflated income 12 number – that the borrower could not afford to repay. Id. at 218. The Second Amended 13 Complaint contains similar, if somewhat weaker, allegations with respect to National City's, 14 GreenPoint's, Wells Fargo's, SunTrust's, and WaMu's origination practices.

15 Notwithstanding its detailed allegations about Countrywide, NECA does not specifically 16 allege Countrywide originated any of the loans backing either of the Certificates it purchased.
17 Instead, NECA alleges that GreenPoint and Wells Fargo did. Indeed, according to the Second 18 Amended Complaint, the originators of the loans backing each of the 17 Trusts – or, in the case
19 of the 2007-5 Trust, the two "Groups" therein – varied dramatically. For example, National City 20 is alleged to have originated a significant number of loans in only six of the Trusts, Countrywide 21 and GreenPoint in only five, Wells Fargo in only four, SunTrust in only three, and WaMu in just

1 two. For five of the Trusts, none of these originators is alleged to have originated any loans; for 2 one of the Trusts, SunTrust is alleged to have originated them all. As to Group 1 versus Group 2 3 of the 2007-5 Offering, each was backed by a different loan pool. Countrywide is alleged to 4 have originated over 61% of the loans backing Group 2 of the 2007-5 Trust, but none of the 5 loans backing Group 1. National City is also alleged to have originated loans in Group 2 of the 6 2007-5 Trust (8%), but none in Group 1. By contrast, as we have seen, GreenPoint originated
7 loans backing Certificates in Group 1 of the 2007-5 Trust – the Group to which NECA’s 8 Certificates belong – but, according to the Second Amended Complaint, none in Group 2. It is 9 unclear from the pleadings whether Wells Fargo originated loans in both Groups of the 2007-5 10 Offering, but the prospectus associated with that Offering estimates that 0.09% of the loans in 11 Group 1, and 1.02% of the loans in Group 2, were originated by Wells Fargo.

12 Not surprisingly in light of this variation in loan composition among the Trusts, only the 13 Prospectus Supplements unique to each individual Offering identified the originators of the loans 14 in the Trusts and set forth their respective lending guidelines – the descriptions of which, 15 plaintiff alleges, were similarly misleading. For example, the Prospectus Supplements for the 16 2007-5 and 2007-10 Trusts stated that GreenPoint’s underwriting guidelines “are applied to 17 evaluate the prospective borrower’s . . . repayment ability” and that “[e]xceptions to the 18 guidelines are permitted where compensating factors are present.” 2007-5 Prospectus 19 Supplement at S-61; 2007-10 Prospectus Supplement at S-55; see also 2007-10 Prospectus 20 Supplement at S-60 (alleging similar representations by Wells Fargo). The Supplements also 21 stated that GreenPoint’s underwriting standards required appraisals to conform to USPAP,

1 appraisals that “generally will have been based on prices obtained on recent sales of comparable 2 properties.” 2007-5 Prospectus Supplement at S-63; 2007-10 Prospectus Supplement at S-56.

3 The Second Amended Complaint alleges similar representations in the other Trusts’ Prospectus
4 Supplements about Countrywide’s, National City’s, SunTrust’s, and WaMu’s underwriting 5 practices.

6 Plaintiff alleges that the truth about the Certificates’ risk came to light in mid-2008.⁶ As 7 a result, NECA alleges (in its Second Amended Complaint) that the rating agencies “put 8 negative watch labels on the Certificate[s] . . . and downgraded previously-assigned ratings,” 9 J.A. at 110; that “delinquency rates on the underlying mortgage loans . . . skyrocketed,” id. at 10 138; that the Certificates were “no longer marketable at prices anywhere near the prices paid by 11 plaintiff and the Class,” id. at 110; and that “holders would likely receive less absolute cash flow 12 in the future and receive it, if at all, on an untimely basis” given that they were “exposed to much 13 more risk with respect to both the timing and absolute cash flow to be received than the Offering 14 Documents represented,” id. In short, NECA alleges that “the value of the [C]ertificates ha[d]
15 diminished greatly since their original offering, as ha[d] the price at which members of the Class 16 could dispose of them[,] . . . caus[ing] damages to [NECA] and the Class.” Id. at 139. At the 17 time of its filing of this lawsuit, NECA continued to hold the Certificates.

⁶ The Second Amended Complaint alleges that “[d]owngrades to the overwhelming majority of Trusts did not occur until 2008.” J.A. at 138.

Procedural History

In September 2009 the district court granted defendants’ motion to dismiss NECA’s First Amended Complaint, with leave to amend. In a January 2010 oral ruling, it granted defendants’ motion to dismiss the Second Amended Complaint. The court held, first, that NECA lacked standing to bring claims under §§ 11 and 12(a)(2) on behalf of purchasers of Certificates from any of the 15 other Trusts because it did not purchase Certificates from Trusts other than 2007-10 and 2007-5 Trusts and “has not shown that the injuries it alleges based upon purchases of [Certificates from] those two [T]rusts are the same . . . as those allegedly suffered by purchasers of [Certificates from] outlying [T]rusts backed by distinct sets of loans.” Id. at 198.

The court rejected NECA’s argument that, because all of the purchasers were subject to the same misrepresentations from the same Shelf Registration Statement with respect to the same types of securities, their injuries were sufficiently similar to confer standing upon NECA to assert claims on behalf of all. While acknowledging that “[i]n a class action, a plaintiff who was injured who was practically identically situated with other people who did exactly what he did can be a class representative,” the court concluded that “that is . . . only when th[o]se other people bought the same securities that the plaintiff bought.” Id. at 162. The court granted NECA leave to amend, but “only with respect to the [C]ertificates that [NECA] purchased,” and directed plaintiff to “tie any alleged misstatements that are actionable on these [C]ertificates regarding loan underwriting or appraisal practices to the loans actually underlying the

1 [C]ertificates from which it purchased.”⁷ Id. at 200. Plaintiff “understood [the district court’s]
2 order” to mean that it could still “su[e] on behalf of all purchasers of the [T]rust, all tranches.” 3 Id. at 259. But as the district court clarified in a subsequent oral ruling, its “understanding of 4 how [it] ruled” was that NECA could “only represent the class of persons or entities that 5 purchased the particular . . . [C]ertificate from the particular tranche from the particular [T]rust” 6 from which NECA purchased its Certificates. Id. at 259-60.

7 Second, the district court held that NECA failed to allege “a cognizable loss” under § 11.
8 It reasoned that NECA’s allegation that it was exposed to greatly enhanced risk with respect to 9 both the timing and amount of cash flow under the Certificates was insufficient to plead injury 10 because of the Offering Documents’ “specific warning . . . about the possibility . . . that the 11 [C]ertificates may not be resalable.” Id. at 199.

12 NECA then filed a Third Amended Complaint, adding the following allegations:

13 There is a secondary market for the purchase and sale of the Certificates.
14 There has been a market for the resale of investments like the Certificates

⁷ In a subsequent oral ruling, the court also appeared to reject defendants’ arguments (1) that none of the six categories of alleged misstatements set forth in NECA’s complaint constituted material misrepresentations; and (2) that NECA’s claims were time-barred because the Fund was on notice, or inquiry notice, of its claims more than a year before filing suit, see 15 U.S.C. § 77m (establishing a one-year statute of limitations for §§ 11 and 12(a)(2) claims which begins to run upon “the discovery of the untrue statement or omission, or after such discovery should have been made by the exercise of reasonable diligence”). See J.A. at 291-292 (district court expressing preliminary view that “the only allegation here of any real substance . . . has to do with the standards that were followed and would be followed in valuing the loans, in valuing the mortgages” and that “there is enough here with respect to . . . Countrywide” but indicating that the court “may want [NECA] to replead to allege specifically which allegations [it is] really relying on”); id. at 305-306 (rejecting defendants’ argument that NECA could, as a matter of law, be deemed to have been on notice of its claims prior to the “reduction in ratings” on the “particular [C]ertificates” it purchased). We decline to reach these potential alternative grounds for affirmance urged by defendants on appeal due to a lack of clarity about whether and how the district court ruled on them.

1 since at least 2007. The trading volume of Certificates like those at issue 2 was at least $1-$1.5 billion during December 2008, the time at which the 3 first of the actions asserting the claims herein was filed. In a non-forced 4 sale in the secondary market in December 2008, the [Fund] and the Class 5 would have netted, at most, between 35 and 45 cents on the dollar. In 6 other words, a sale on the date the first lawsuit was filed would have 7 resulted in a loss of at least 55 to 65 cents on each dollar amount 8 purchased.

10 Id. at 236.

11 Defendants again moved to dismiss and, in October 2010, the district court again 12 concluded that the allegations were insufficient to allege injury. The court reasoned that, 13 because the Fund knew the Certificates might not be liquid, it could not allege injury based on 14 the hypothetical price of the Certificates in a secondary market at the time of suit. NECA-IBEW
15 Health & Welfare Fund v. Goldman, Sachs & Co., 743 F. Supp. 2d 288, 292 (S.D.N.Y. 2010).
16 Even assuming a decline in market price could provide factual support for the contention that the 17 Certificates declined in value, the court reasoned, “the complaint lacks any factual enhancement 18 of the bare assertion that a secondary market for their Certificates actually exists” or to “allege 19 any facts regarding the actual market price for the Certificates at the time of suit.” Id. (emphasis 20 added). The court rejected NECA’s argument that “the risk of diminished cash flow in the future 21 establishes a present injury cognizable under [§] 11,” reasoning that “[§] 11 does not permit 22 recovery for increased risk.” Id. Observing that asset-backed securities are ““primarily serviced 23 by the cash flows of a discrete pool of receivables or other financial assets, either fixed or 24 revolving, that by their terms convert into cash within a finite time period,”” the court held that 25 “NECA must allege the actual failure to receive payments due under the Certificates” in order to

1 “allege an injury cognizable under Section 11.” Id. (quoting 17 C.F.R. § 229.1101(c)). In an 2 earlier oral ruling, the district court had sustained plaintiff’s § 12(a)(2) claims against similar 3 attacks, finding that NECA pleaded a viable claim for rescission (as opposed to damages)
4 because it continued to hold its Certificates. However, because NECA failed to allege that it
5 bought the 2007-5 Certificates directly from Goldman Sachs in a public offering, the Fund
6 subsequently abandoned its claim under § 12(a)(2) as to those Certificates. See In re Morgan
7 Stanley Info. Fund Sec. Litig., 592 F.3d 347, 359 (2d Cir. 2010) (explaining that proper 8 defendants in § 12(a)(2) cases are certain “statutory sellers” who, inter alia, “successfully 9 solicited the purchase of a security” (quotation marks and brackets omitted)).

10 Accordingly, all that remained after these rulings was a single claim for rescission under 11 § 12(a)(2) based on NECA’s purchase of the 2007-10 Certificates. However, counsel for 12 plaintiff subsequently learned that in November 2010, in the normal course of its investment 13 activities, NECA had sold the 2007-10 Certificates at a 32% loss. Because that sale eliminated
14 NECA’s ability to rescind its purchase, but seemingly provided the realized loss the district court 15 deemed necessary to allege injury under § 11, the Fund moved for leave to amend its complaint 16 and for relief from the dismissal order under Rule 60(b). The district court denied the motion as 17 “just too late,” J.A. at 381, thereby extinguishing all of NECA’s claims. The court entered 18 judgment and NECA appealed. Its main contentions are that the district court erred (1) in 19 dismissing for lack of standing its class claims asserted on behalf of purchasers of Certificates
20 from different tranches and from other Offerings, and (2) in requiring it to plead an out-of-pocket 21 loss in order to allege injury under § 11. We review de novo a district court’s dismissal for lack

1 of standing and for failure to state a claim. Selevan v. N.Y. Thruway Auth., 584 F.3d 82, 88 (2d
2 Cir. 2009). In so doing, we accept as true all non-conclusory factual allegations in the complaint 3 and draw all reasonable inferences in plaintiff’s favor to determine whether the allegations
4 plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678-79 (2009);

6 DISCUSSION

7 Sections 11 and 12(a)(2) impose liability on certain participants in a registered securities 8 offering when the registration statement or prospectus associated with that offering contains 9 material misstatements or omissions. 15 U.S.C. § 77k, l(a)(2). The provisions are “notable both 10 for the limitations on their scope as well as the interrorem nature of the liability they create.” In 11 re Morgan Stanley Info. Fund, 592 F.3d at 359. Section 11 imposes strict liability on issuers and 12 signatories, and negligence liability on underwriters, “[i]n case any part of the registration 13 statement, when such part became effective, contained an untrue statement of a material fact or 14 omitted to state a material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements 15 therein not misleading.” 15 U.S.C. § 77k(a). A claim under § 11 belongs to “any person 16 acquiring such security.” Id. Section 12(a)(2) imposes liability under similar circumstances 17 against certain “statutory sellers” for misstatements or omissions in a prospectus. See id. § 18 77l(a)(2); In re Morgan Stanley Info. Fund, 592 F.3d at 359. And § 15 imposes liability on 19 individuals or entities that “control[] any person liable” under §§ 11 or 12. 15 U.S.C. § 77o.

20 Neither scienter, reliance, nor loss causation is an element of § 11 or § 12(a)(2) claims 21 which – unless they are premised on allegations of fraud – need not satisfy the heightened

1 particularity requirements of Rule 9(b).⁸ Panther Partners Inc. v. Ikanos Commc'ns, Inc., 681
2 F.3d 114, 120 (2d Cir. 2012). Nor do the heightened pleading standards of the Private Securities 3 Litigation Reform Act apply to such non-fraud claims. See 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4(b)(1)-(2). Thus,

10 12(a)(2) “apply more narrowly but give rise to liability more readily” than § 10(b) of the 11 Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 77j(b)).

12 We first address NECA’s argument that the district court erred in holding that it lacked 13 standing to assert class claims with respect to Certificates from the 15 Offerings, and from 14 tranches of the 2007-5 and 2007-10 Offerings, from which it did not purchase Certificates.
15 NECA argues that the single Shelf Registration Statement common to all the purchasers’ 16 Certificates was “rife with misstatements,” so “there was no reason to require the Fund to buy 17 Certificates from each Trust in order to establish its standing.” Appellant’s Br. 57-58. As to the ⁸ Although §§ 11 and 12(a)(2) make certain due diligence and “reasonable care” defenses available to certain defendants, see 15 U.S.C. § 77k(b), l(a)(2), and although defendants may avoid liability under both provisions for damages not caused by the alleged misrepresentations or omissions, see id. § 77k(e), l(b), “defendants bear the burden of demonstrating the applicability of each of these defenses, which are therefore unavailing as a means of defeating a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6),” In re Morgan Stanley Info. Fund, 592 F.3d at 359 n.7.

1 allegedly false and misleading Prospectus Supplements unique to each Offering, because each 2 was “expressly incorporated” into the same false and misleading Shelf Registration Statement, 3 NECA argues its standing to sue for misrepresentations in all 17 Prospectus Supplements is 4 “secure.” Id. at 55. In short, according to plaintiff, “the common [Shelf] Registration Statement 5 provides the glue that binds together the absent Class Members’ purchases of Certificates, as 6 well as the additionally misleading [Prospectus] Supplements that defendants expressly 7 incorporated into it.” Id. at 58.

8 Defendants, on the other hand, contend that the fact that each Offering was issued 9 pursuant to a different “registration statement” under SEC regulations dooms NECA’s textual 10 standing argument, because “the registration statement” referred to in § 11 is different for each 11 Offering – even if every Offering’s registration statement includes the same Shelf Registration 12 Statement. Appellees’ Br. 18 (quotation marks omitted). Moreover, defendants observe, the 13 Shelf Registration Statement common to all the Certificates contained no information about the 14 loan originators or mortgage collateral underlying them. That information was instead contained 15 in the Prospectus Supplements unique to each Offering, without which the Certificates could not 16 have been issued – and which contained “unique” representations “focused on the specific loans 17 underlying each offering and the specific underwriting standards and origination practices in 18 effect at the time those specific loans were originated.” Id. at 19 (quotation marks omitted).

19 As to tranche-level standing, defendants argue that, despite the fact that the Certificates 20 in every tranche of a given Offering are registered pursuant to the same registration statement, 21 NECA lacks standing to represent Certificate-holders outside the specific tranche from which it

1 purchased because “different [C]ertificates have different investment characteristics and may 2 suffer different harm based on the non- or under-performance of sometimes differing underlying 3 loans.” Id. at 25. Just as “the downgrade in credit ratings, the particular guidelines used by the 4 mortgage originator for that pool of loans, and the default and delinquency rates all differ based 5 on the particular [O]ffering,” defendants argue, “these variances [also] exist at the [tranche]
6 level.” Id. at 23. The district court, as noted above, essentially agreed with defendants’ 7 arguments, concluding that while a class representative may represent people practically 8 identically situated to her, they must have purchased the same securities she purchased.

9 NECA has Article III standing to sue defendants in its own right because it plausibly 10 alleged (1) a diminution in the value of the 2007-5 and 2007-10 Certificates (2) as a result of 11 defendants’ inclusion of misleading statements in the 2007-5 and 2007-10 registration statements 12 and associated prospectuses that is (3) redressable through rights of action for damages under §§ 13 11 and 12(a)(2). See Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61 (1992) (holding that a 14 plaintiff must allege (1) an injury in fact (2) fairly traceable to defendants’ actions that is (3) 15 redressable by the requested relief to demonstrate Article III standing).

16 NECA also has statutory standing in its own right, having purchased the 2007-5 and 17 2007-10 Certificates pursuant to registration statements, parts of which are alleged to have 18 contained materially misleading statements, and having purchased the 2007-10 Certificates 19 “directly from Goldman Sachs, with GS Mortgage as the Issuer, in a public offering” pursuant to 20 the Offering Documents – with both entities’ “solicit[ing] sales of the Certificates for financial

1 gain.” J.A. at 238; see 15 U.S.C. § 77k(a), l(a)(2); In re Morgan Stanley Info. Fund, 592 F.3d at 2 359.

3 But whether NECA has “class standing” – that is, standing to assert claims on behalf of 4 purchasers of Certificates from other Offerings, or from different tranches of the same Offering – 5 does not turn on whether NECA would have statutory or Article III standing to seek recovery for 6 misleading statements in those Certificates’ Offering Documents. NECA clearly lacks standing 7 to assert such claims on its behalf because it did not purchase those Certificates. Because the 8 class standing analysis is different, the district court erred in concluding, based on the fact that 9 NECA purchased just two “particular . . . [C]ertificate[s] from . . . particular tranche[s] from . . .
10 particular [T]rust[s]” that it necessarily lacked standing to assert claims on behalf of purchasers
11 of Certificates from other Trusts and from other tranches within the 2007-10 and 2007-5 Trusts.⁹
12 J.A. at 260.

13 According to NECA, “[b]ecause the Fund’s purchases of Certificates afforded [it] 14 statutory standing under the Securities Act, and the case presented a genuine ‘case or 15 controversy’ under Article III, it then became a matter of whether Rule 23 considerations could 16 be satisfied at the proper time – not at this motion-to-dismiss stage.” Appellant’s Br. 62.

⁹ It also erred to the extent it based its conclusion on the (mistaken) assumption that “only when . . . other people bought the same securities that the plaintiff bought” may a “practically identically situated” plaintiff serve as their “class representative.” J.A. at 162; see Hevesi v. Citigroup Inc., 366 F.3d 70, 82-83 (2d Cir. 2004) (observing that “a class representative can establish the requisite typicality under Rule 23 if the defendants committed the same wrongful acts in the same manner against all members of the class,” even if the class representative lacks standing to sue on every claim asserted by the class). In any event, NECA’s standing to assert claims on others’ behalf is an inquiry separate from its ability to represent the interests of absent class members under Fed. R. Civ. P. Rule 23(a). See Appellant’s Br. 62 (“What the district court thought was a ‘standing’ issue was in reality a class certification issue.” (emphasis omitted)).

1 Indeed, we have said that, “[t]o establish Article III standing in a class action . . . for every 2 named defendant there must be at least one named plaintiff who can assert a claim directly 3 against that defendant, and at that point standing is satisfied and only then will the inquiry shift 4 to a class action analysis.” Cent. States Se. & Sw. Areas Health & Welfare Fund v.
5 Merck-Medco Managed Care, L.L.C., 504 F.3d 229, 241 (2d Cir. 2007) (quotation marks 6 omitted). There is support for that proposition in earlier decisions of the Supreme Court. See 7 Sosna v. Iowa, 419 U.S. 393, 403 (1975) (“Th[e] conclusion [that a named plaintiff has a case or 8 controversy] does not automatically establish that [she] is entitled to litigate the interests of the 9 class she seeks to represent, but it does shift the focus of examination from the elements of 10 justiciability to the ability of the named representative to ‘fairly and adequately protect the 11 interests of the class.’” (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a))).¹⁰

¹⁰ See also Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 395-96 (1996) (Souter, J., concurring in part, dissenting in part, and concurring in the judgment) (“Whether or not the named plaintiff who meets individual standing requirements may assert the rights of absent class members is neither a standing issue nor an Article III case or controversy issue but depends rather on meeting the prerequisites of Rule 23 governing class actions.” (quotation marks omitted)); id. at 396 (Souter, J., concurring in part, dissenting in part, and concurring in the judgment) (“As long as the representative parties have a direct and substantial interest, they have standing; the question whether they may be allowed to present claims on behalf of others . . . depends not on standing, but on an assessment of typicality and adequacy of representation.” (quotation marks omitted)); id. at 408 n.4 (Stevens, J., dissenting) (“If named class plaintiffs have standing, the standing of the class members is satisfied by the requirements for class certification.”); Gen. Tel. Co. of Sw. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 159 & n.15 (1982) (Mexican-American employee passed over for promotion could not represent class of Mexican-Americans whose applications had been denied because, under Rule 23(a)’s typicality and adequacy requirements – but not as a matter of standing – the promotion-base injuries were too dissimilar from the application-based injuries); Payton v. Cnty. of Kane, 308 F.3d 673, 677 (7th Cir. 2002), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 812 (2003) (reversing district court’s dismissal of putative class action on grounds that plaintiffs-arrestees, allegedly injured by two counties’ implementation of a state bond-posting statute, lacked standing to sue on behalf of arrestees from seventeen other counties; “putting to one side the problem inherent in conflating the standing inquiry with the inquiry under Rule 23 about the suitability of a plaintiff to serve as a class representative, the proper remedy for this shortcoming is not dismissal of the entire action, but rather an order denying class certification and permitting the case to continue as an individual suit”); Fallick v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 162 F.3d 410,

1 However, as the Supreme Court has acknowledged, there is some “tension” in its case 2 law as to whether “variation” between (1) a named plaintiff’s claims and (2) the claims of 3 putative class members “is a matter of Article III standing . . . or whether it goes to the propriety 4 of class certification pursuant to [Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)].” Gratz v. Bollinger, 539 U.S. 244, 263 5 & n.15 (2003) (citing Gen. Tel. Co., 457 U.S. at 149 and Blum v. Yaretsky, 457 U.S. 991 (1982));
6 see also Plumbers’ Union Local No. 12 Pension Fund v. Nomura Asset Acceptance Corp., 632
7 F.3d 762, 768 (1st Cir. 2011) (“The issue looks straightforward and one would expect it to be 8 well settled; neither assumption is entirely true.”). For example, in Blum v. Yaretsky, where the 9 Court found class standing to be lacking, two New York state nursing home residents challenged 10 decisions by the nursing home’s utilization review committee to transfer them, without adequate 11 notice or a hearing, to lower levels of care. After certifying a class, the district court expanded it 12 to include patients transferred to higher levels of care without adequate procedural safeguards.
13 The Supreme Court held that the district court “exceeded its authority in adjudicating the 14 procedures governing transfers to higher levels of care” because the threat of such transfers 15 lacked “sufficient immediacy and reality” for plaintiffs, who therefore lacked “standing to seek 16 an adjudication of the procedures attending such transfers.” 457 U.S. at 1001-02 (quotation 17 marks omitted). As the Court explained, “a plaintiff who has been subject to injurious conduct 422-23 (6th Cir. 1998) (“Once his standing has been established, whether a plaintiff will be able to represent the putative class, including absent class members, depends solely on whether he is able to meet the additional criteria encompassed in [Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)].”); Gratsy v. Amalgamated Clothing & Textile Workers Union, 828 F.2d 123, 130 n.8 (3d Cir. 1987), abrogated on other grounds by Reed v. United Transp. Union, 488 U.S. 319 (1989) (because named plaintiffs alleged personal injury, defendants’ contentions that they “do not have standing to raise the claims of the class . . . confuse standing and the typicality requirement of Rule 23(a)(3).”).

1 of one kind [does not] possess by virtue of that injury the necessary stake in litigating conduct of 2 another kind, although similar, to which he has not been subject.” Id. at 999. Because the 3 conditions under which transfers to higher versus lower levels of care occurred were 4 “sufficiently different,” and because plaintiffs’ attack “presuppose[d] a deprivation of protected 5 property interests” – in contrast to the increase in Medicaid benefits attendant upon transfers to 6 higher levels of care – any judicial assessment of the procedural adequacy of the latter “would be 7 wholly gratuitous and advisory.” Id. at 1001-02.

8 The Court also found class standing lacking in Lewis v. Casey, where 22 inmates of 9 various prisons operated by the Arizona Department of Corrections (“ADOC”) filed a class 10 action “on behalf of all adult prisoners who are or will be incarcerated by [ADOC]” alleging that 11 the ADOC was depriving them of their rights of access to the courts and counsel. 518 U.S. at 12 346 (quotation marks omitted). The district court found actual injury on the part of only one 13 named plaintiff, who was illiterate. Id. at 358. Nevertheless, it issued a 25-page injunction 14 mandating sweeping changes to the ADOC system. Id. at 346-47. The Supreme Court 15 “eliminate[d] from the proper scope of th[e] injunction provisions directed” at inadequacies not 16 “found to have harmed any plaintiff in this lawsuit.” Id. at 358. The Court explained that a 17 plaintiff’s demonstration of “harm from one particular inadequacy in government 18 administration” does not authorize a court “to remedy all inadequacies in that administration.” 19 Id. at 357. Rather “[t]he remedy must . . . be limited to the inadequacy that produced the injury 20 in fact that the plaintiff has established.” Id. The majority expressly rejected Justice Stevens’s 21 suggestion that its holding amounted to “a conclusion that the class was improper,” asserting that

1 “[t]he standing determination is quite separate from certification of the class.” Id. at 358 n.6
2 (pointing to the Court’s failure to “disturb the class definition” in Blum while simultaneously 3 holding that plaintiffs lacked standing to challenge transfers to higher levels of care).

4 By contrast, the Court in Gratz v. Bollinger found the claims of the designated class 5 representative, Hamacher, sufficiently similar to those of the class to support class standing.
6 Hamacher, a white male, alleged that the University of Michigan’s use of race in undergraduate 7 admissions denied him the opportunity to compete for admission on an equal basis. 539 U.S. at 8 262. After being denied admission and enrolling at another school, Hamacher demonstrated that 9 he was “able and ready” to apply as a transfer student should the University cease to use race in 10 undergraduate admissions. Id. (quotation marks omitted). In a dissenting opinion, Justice 11 Stevens argued that, because Hamacher had enrolled at another institution, he lacked standing to 12 represent class members challenging the University’s use of race in undergraduate freshman
13 admissions (as opposed to transfer admissions). Id. at 286 (Stevens, J., dissenting). The criteria 14 used to evaluate transfer applications at Michigan “differ[ed] significantly from the criteria used 15 to evaluate freshman undergraduate applications,” Justice Stevens concluded. Id. at 286. For 16 example, the University’s 2000 freshman admissions policy provided for 20 points to be added 17 to the selection index scores of minority applicants, whereas the University did not use points in 18 its transfer policy. Id. Citing Lewis and Blum, Justice Stevens concluded that “Hamacher cannot 19 base his right to complain about the freshman admissions policy on his hypothetical injury under 20 a wholly separate transfer policy.” Id. “At bottom,” he concluded,

1 [Hamacher’s] interest in obtaining an injunction for the benefit of younger 2 third parties is comparable to . . . that of the Medicaid patients transferred 3 to less intensive care who had no standing to litigate on behalf of patients
4 objecting to transfers to more intensive care facilities in Blum[], 457
5 U.S.[] at 1001[]. To have standing, it is elementary that [Hamacher’s] 6 own interests must be implicated. Because [he] has [no] personal stake in 7 this suit for prospective relief, [he lacks] standing.

9 Id. at 289.

10 But a majority of the Court rejected Justice Stevens’s view, finding that “the University’s 11 use of race in undergraduate transfer admissions does not implicate a significantly different set of 12 concerns than does its use of race in undergraduate freshman admissions.” Id. at 265 (emphasis 13 added). “[T]he only difference between the University’s use of race in considering freshman and 14 transfer applicants,” the majority observed, was that all underrepresented minority freshman 15 applicants received 20 points and “virtually” all who were minimally qualified were admitted, 16 while “generally” all minimally qualified minority transfer applicants were admitted outright.
17 Id. at 266. “While this difference might be relevant to a narrow tailoring analysis,” the majority 18 observed, “it clearly has no effect on [Hamacher’s] standing to challenge the University’s use of 19 race in undergraduate admissions and [the University’s] assertion that diversity [was] a 20 compelling state interest that justifies its consideration of the race of its undergraduate 21 applicants.” Id. Whereas in Blum “transfers to lower levels of care involved a number of 22 fundamentally different concerns than did transfers to higher ones,” in Gratz “the same set of 23 concerns is implicated by the University’s use of race in evaluating all undergraduate admissions 24 applications under the guidelines.” Id. at 264, 267 (emphases added).

1 Admittedly, constitutional litigation seeking injunctive relief does not map all that neatly
2 onto statutorily based securities litigation seeking monetary damages. But distilling these cases 3 down to a broad standard for class standing, we believe they stand collectively for the 4 proposition that, in a putative class action, a plaintiff has class standing if he plausibly alleges (1) 5 that he “personally has suffered some actual . . . injury as a result of the putatively illegal 6 conduct of the defendant,” Blum, 457 U.S. at 999 (quotation marks omitted), and (2) that such 7 conduct implicates “the same set of concerns” as the conduct alleged to have caused injury to 8 other members of the putative class by the same defendants, Gratz, 539 U.S. at 267. Therefore, 9 the district court’s requirement that NECA “show[] that [its] injuries . . . are the same . . . as 10 those allegedly suffered by purchasers of [Certificates from] outlying [T]rusts backed by distinct 11 sets of loans” was error. J.A. at 198 (emphasis added). We note that, in the context of claims 12 alleging injury based on misrepresentations, the misconduct alleged will almost always be the 13 same: the making of a false or misleading statement. Whether that conduct implicates the same 14 set of concerns for distinct sets of plaintiffs, however, will depend on the nature and content of 15 the specific misrepresentation alleged.

16 We have already held that NECA personally suffered injury as a result of defendants’ 17 inclusion of allegedly misleading statements in the Offering Documents associated with the 18 Certificates it purchased. But whether that conduct by defendants implicates the same set of 19 concerns as their inclusion of similar if not identical statements in the Offering Documents
20 associated with other Certificates – whether from different Offerings or from different tranches 21 of the same Offering – is much harder to answer. Here, it bears emphasizing that NECA is not

1 suing GreenPoint and Wells Fargo for abandoning their underwriting standards; it is suing the 2 three Goldman Sachs entities that issued, underwrote, and sponsored every Certificate from all 3 17 Trusts. Moreover, the same three defendants are alleged to have inserted nearly identical 4 misrepresentations into the Offering Documents associated with all of the Certificates, whose 5 purchasers plaintiff seeks to represent. For example, the Shelf Registration Statement common 6 to every Certificate’s registration statement represents that, for loans purchased under the 7 Conduit Program, “the originating lender makes a determination about whether the borrower’s 8 monthly income . . . will be sufficient to enable the borrower to meet its monthly obligations on 9 the mortgage loan and other expenses related to the property.” It similarly represented that, for 10 mortgage loans generally, “[t]he lender . . . applies the underwriting standards to evaluate the 11 borrower’s credit standing and repayment ability” and “makes a determination as to whether the 12 prospective borrower has sufficient monthly income available (as to meet the borrower’s 13 monthly obligations . . .).” The fact that those representations appeared in separate Offering 14 Documents (a point emphasized heavily by defendants) does not by itself raise “a number of 15 fundamentally different concerns,” Gratz, 539 U.S. at 264, because the location of the 16 representations has no effect on a given purchaser’s assertion that the representation was 17 misleading (the source of the injury) – just as the difference in the University of Michigan’s 18 transfer and freshman admissions policies had no effect on the University’s assertion that 19 diversity was a compelling state interest. Indeed, one could imagine a series of corporate debt 20 offerings, issued over the course of a year, all of which contained an identical misrepresentation 21 about the issuing company’s impending insolvency. Sections 11 and 12(a)(2) claims brought by

1 a purchaser of debt from one offering would raise a “set of concerns” nearly identical to that of a 2 purchaser from another offering: the misrepresentation would infect the debt issued from every 3 offering in like manner, given that all of it is backed by the same company whose solvency has 4 been called into question. In that case, the inappropriateness of denying class standing on the 5 happenstance of the misrepresentation’s location in one offering versus another seems patent.

6 But that is not this case. The putative class members here did not all purchase debt 7 backed by a single company through offering documents tainted by a single misstatement about 8 that company. They bought Certificates issued through 17 separate Offerings, each backed by a 9 distinct set of loans issued by a distinct set of originators. For at least one of those Offerings – 10 the 2007-5 Offering – the Certificates were divided further into two separate Groups, each of 11 which was backed by a distinct set of loans issued in large part by a distinct set of originators.
12 And within each Offering (and within the two Groups of the 2007-5 Offering), the Certificates 13 were divided further into separate tranches offering various priorities of entitlement to the cash 14 flows from the loans backing them. In the context of §§ 11 and 12(a)(2) claims alleging 15 misstatements about origination guidelines, we think that differences in the identity of the 16 originators backing the Certificates matters for the purposes of assessing whether those claims 17 raise the same set of concerns. That is because, to the extent the representations in the Offering 18 Documents were misleading with respect to one Certificate, they were not necessarily 19 misleading with respect to others. Thus, while the alleged injury suffered by each Offering’s 20 Certificate-holder may “flow from” the same Shelf Registration Statement or from nearly 21 identical misstatements contained in distinct Prospectus Supplements, each of those alleged

1 injuries has the potential to be very different – and could turn on very different proof. That proof
2 would center on whether the particular originators of the loans backing the particular Offering 3 from which a Certificate-holder purchased a security had in fact abandoned its underwriting 4 guidelines, rendering defendants’ Offering Documents false or misleading.

5 The Second and Third Amended Complaints’ emphasis on the abandonment by specific 6 loan originators of their stated underwriting guidelines reinforces this principle. The originator-
7 specific allegations provide the necessary link between (1) the Offering Documents’
8 representations in a vacuum and (2) the falsity of those representations. Indeed, after the district 9 court dismissed for lack of standing plaintiff’s claims on behalf of purchasers of Certificates 10 from other Offerings, NECA eliminated from its complaint any discussion of the allegedly 11 abusive underwriting practices of National City, SunTrust, and WaMu, none of whose loans are 12 alleged to have backed plaintiff’s Certificates.¹¹ Thus, while NECA and purchasers of 13 Certificates from National City-, SunTrust-, and WaMu-backed Offerings may both have 14 suffered injuries, those suffered due to misstatements in the latter group of Offerings were 15 sufficiently different in character and origin, as NECA itself appears, based on its pleadings, to 16 appreciate.

¹¹ However, notwithstanding that Countrywide loans back neither the 2007-10 nor 2007-5 Group 1 Certificates, the Third Amended Complaint retains extensive allegations concerning that originator’s abandonment of its stated underwriting guidelines. Perhaps that is because, plaintiff reasoned, Countrywide loans did back the 2007-5 Group 2 Certificates, which were registered and offered pursuant to identical Offering Documents as the 2007-5 Group 1 Certificates. Or perhaps it is because the allegations pertaining to Countrywide were the ones the district court specifically found “enough” of to prevent it from “throw[ing]. . . out” the complaint. J.A. at 291. Either way, for the reasons that follow, we do not see the relevance of those allegations to the claims plaintiff has standing to assert.

1 However, to the extent certain Offerings were backed by loans originated by originators 2 common to those backing the 2007-5 and 2007-10 Offerings, NECA’s claims raise a sufficiently 3 similar set of concerns to permit it to purport to represent Certificate-holders from those 4 Offerings. Therefore, under the Second Amended Complaint, plaintiff has class standing to 5 assert the claims of purchasers of Certificates from the 5 additional Trusts containing loans 6 originated by GreenPoint, Wells Fargo, or both. Based on the allegations in that complaint, 7 those Trusts include the GSAA Home Equity Trust 2007-3 (29% GreenPoint-originated loans), 8 2007-4 (36% GreenPoint-originated loans), 2007-6 (9% GreenPoint-originated loans), and 9 2007-7 (23% GreenPoint-originated and 67% Wells Fargo-originated loans) and the GSR
10 Mortgage Loan Trust 2007-3F (47% Wells Fargo-originated loans). Plaintiff also has standing 11 to assert claims on behalf of purchasers of Certificates from Group 2 of the 2007-5 Trust 12 because, according to the 2007-5 prospectus, those Certificates contained at least some loans 13 originated by Wells Fargo. However, plaintiff lacks standing to assert claims on behalf of 14 purchasers of Certificates from the other 10 Trusts.¹²

15 Turning to the question of tranche-level standing, we do not believe the Certificates’ 16 varying levels of payment priority raise such a “fundamentally different set of concerns” as to 17 defeat class standing. Gratz, 539 U.S. at 264. Within any given Offering (or within any given 18 Group of a particular Offering), some Certificates may be entitled to cash flows from the loans 19 backing them earlier than others. But that does not alter the fact that all of the Certificate-

¹² Those Trusts are the GSAA Home Equity Trust 2007-8; the GSAMP Trust 2007-FM2, 2007-HE1, 2007-HE2, and 2007-HSBC1; the GSR Mortgage Loan Trust 2007-OA1, 2007-OA2, 2007-4F, and 2007-5F; and the STARM Mortgage Loan Trust 2007-4.

1 holders' cash flows within any such Offering or Group derive from loans originated by some of 2 the same originators. Regardless of their level of subordination, each Certificate-holder within 3 an Offering or Group backed by loans originated by similar lenders has the same "necessary 4 stake in litigating" whether those lenders in fact abandoned their underwriting guidelines. Blum, 5 457 U.S. at 999; see also Nomura Asset, 632 F.3d at 770 (reserving decision on future case 6 where "the claims of the named plaintiffs necessarily give them – not just their lawyers – 7 essentially the same incentive to litigate the counterpart claims of the class members because the 8 establishment of the named plaintiffs' claims necessarily establishes those of other class 9 members"). Their ultimate damages will of course vary depending on their level of 10 subordination, but "it is well-established that the fact that damages may have to be ascertained 11 on an individual basis is not sufficient to defeat class certification" under Rule 23(a), let alone 12 class standing. Seijas v. Republic of Argentina, 606 F.3d 53, 58 (2d Cir. 2010). We emphasize 13 that it is by no means a foregone conclusion that, because plaintiff has standing to assert §§ 11 14 and 12(a)(2) claims on behalf of Certificate-holders from different tranches of Offerings (or 15 within Offerings) backed by loans originated by the same originators, a putative class comprised 16 of such Certificate-holders should be certified. The district court, after reviewing all of the Rule 17 23 factors, retains broad discretion to make that determination.¹³

¹³ Compare N.J. Carpenters Health Fund v. Rali Series 2006-QO1 Trust, Nos. 11-1683-cv, 11-1684-cv, 2012 WL 1481519, at *4 (2d Cir. Apr. 30, 2012) (summary order) (finding no abuse of discretion in district court's denial of class certification in §§ 11 and 12(a)(2) MBS action on grounds that, although separate tranches did not defeat adequacy or typicality, individual, not common, issues relating to defendants' knowledge defenses would predominate and class adjudication would not be superior to individual actions), with *Pub. 1 We turn now to NECA’s contention that the district erred in concluding that it failed to 2 allege cognizable damages under § 11. While a plaintiff need not plead damages under § 11, it
3 must satisfy the court that it has suffered a cognizable injury under the statute. Section 11 4 permits a successful plaintiff to recover “the difference between the amount paid for the 5 security” and either

6 (1) the value thereof as of the time such suit was brought, or (2) the price 7 at which such security shall have been disposed of in the market before 8 suit, or (3) the price at which such security shall have been disposed of 9 after suit but before judgment if such damages shall be less than [the 10 measure of damages defined in subsection (1)].

12 15 U.S.C. § 77k(e) (emphasis added).¹⁴ In McMahan & Co. v. Warehouse Entertainment, Inc., 13 65 F.3d 1044 (2d Cir. 1995), this Court provided guidance on the meaning of “value” in § 11(e): 14 First, “the term . . . was intended to mean the security’s true value after the alleged 15 misrepresentations are made public.” Id. at 1048. Second, although “in a market economy, 16 when market value is available and reliable, market value will always be the primary gauge of a 17 security’s] worth,”

18 the value of a security may not be equivalent to its market price.
19 Congress’ use of the term “value,” as distinguished from the terms failed in similar cases and fails here.”), and Pub. Emps.’ Ret. Sys. of Miss. v. Merrill Lynch & Co., 277 F.R.D. 97, 108 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (concluding that, because “the representations in each Offering apply equally to all tranches within that Offering,” any variation in tranches’ repayment rights did not “present a fundamental conflict within the class” (quotation marks omitted)).

¹⁴ A plaintiff asserting a claim under § 12(a)(2) may sue for rescission or, if she no longer owns the security, for “damages.” Id. § 77 l(a)(2). Because the district court denied NECA leave to amend its complaint to seek damages rather than rescission following its sale of the 2007-10 Certificates, it did not consider whether plaintiff alleged a cognizable injury under § 12(a)(2), and we have no occasion to do so here.

1 “amount paid” and “price” indicates that, under certain circumstances, the 2 market price may not adequately reflect the security’s value.

3 Id. at 1048-49 (quotation marks omitted). However, “even where market price is not completely 4 reliable, it serves as a good starting point in determining value.” Id. at 1049. Thus, under § 11, 5 the key is not, as the district court concluded and as defendants contend, market price; the key is 6 value.

7 NECA, as it was required to do, plausibly pled a cognizable injury – a decline in value – 8 under § 11. NECA alleged that “the value of the [C]ertificates ha[d] diminished greatly since 9 their original offering, as ha[d] the price at which members of the Class could dispose of them[,] 10 . . . caus[ing] damages to the plaintiff and the Class.” J.A. at 139. It supported this assertion of 11 injury with the following well-pleaded facts: that the rating agencies “put negative watch labels 12 on the Certificate[s] . . . and downgraded previously-assigned ratings” and that holders were 13 “exposed to much more risk with respect to both the timing and absolute cash flow to be 14 received than the Offering Documents represented.” Id. at 110. The latter allegation was 15 rendered plausible by the complaint’s extensive allegations regarding loan originators’ failure to 16 determine, in a significant number of cases and contrary to their underwriting guidelines, 17 “whether the borrower’s monthly income . . . will be sufficient to enable the borrower to meet its 18 monthly obligations on the mortgage loan and other expenses related to the property.” J.A. at 19 116, 212. Drawing the requisite inferences in plaintiff’s favor, it is not just plausible – but 20 obvious – that mortgage-backed securities like the Certificates would suffer a decline in value as 21 a result of (1) ratings downgrades and (2) less certain future cash flows. Thus, NECA plausibly

1 alleged a “difference between the amount paid for the [Certificates]” and “the value thereof as of 2 the time [its] suit was brought.” 15 U.S.C. § 77k(e).

3 Defendants argue, and the district court reasoned, that plaintiff suffered no loss because 4 the Complaint did not allege any missed payment from the Trusts and the Fund admitted that no 5 payments had been missed. Appellees’ Br. 30; NECA-IBEW, 743 F. Supp. 2d at 292. But basic 6 securities valuation principles – discounting future cash flows to their present value using a rate 7 of interest reflecting the cash flows’ risk – belie the proposition that a fixed income investor 8 must miss an interest payment before his securities can be said to have declined in “value.” The 9 reasonable inference from NECA’s allegations is that, because the loans backing the Certificates 10 were riskier than defendants represented, the future cash flows to which NECA was entitled 11 under the Certificates required a higher discount rate once the Offering Documents’ falsity was 12 revealed, resulting in a lower present value. Put differently, the revelation that borrowers on 13 loans backing the Certificates were less creditworthy than the Offering Documents represented 14 affected the Certificates’ “value” immediately, because it increased the Certificates’ credit risk 15 profile. In this analysis, whether Certificate-holders actually missed a scheduled coupon 16 payment is not determinative. See also Merrill Lynch & Co. v. Allegheny Energy, Inc., 500 F.3d 17 171, 183 (2d Cir. 2007) (“[I]n securities cases there is a presumption that shares are purchased 18 for the purpose of investment and their true value to the investor is the price at which they may 19 later be sold.”).

20 Neither is the existence or liquidity of a secondary market. The district court determined 21 that, because plaintiff “knew [the Certificates] might not be liquid, it [could] not allege an injury

1 based upon the hypothetical price of the Certificates on a secondary market at the time of suit.”
2 NECA-IBEW, 743 F. Supp. 2d at 292. We have three problems with this conclusion. First,
3 NECA alleged the existence of a secondary market. J.A. at 236. Second, the district court’s 4 analysis conflates liquidity risk and credit risk. While plaintiff may have assumed liquidity risk 5 when it purchased the Certificates, it did not assume the heightened credit risk associated with 6 mortgage collateral allegedly far riskier than the Offering Documents represented. Both risks 7 may tend to depress a security’s price, but that does not prevent a damages expert from isolating 8 their respective contributions to a given price decline. And NECA was not required to prove the 9 precise amount of any damages at the pleading stage. Indeed, § 11 works the other way: It 10 presumes that any diminution in value is attributable to the alleged misrepresentations, and 11 places the burden on defendants to disprove causation. See 15 U.S.C. § 77k(e) (“[I]f the 12 defendant proves that any portion or all of [plaintiff’s] damages represents other than the 13 depreciation in value of such security resulting from such part of the registration statement[] with 14 respect to which [defendant’s] liability is asserted, . . . such portion of or all such damages shall 15 not be recoverable.”); In re Morgan Stanley Info. Fund, 592 F.3d at 359 n.7.¹⁵

16 Third, the district court also conflated the price of a security and its “value.” The absence 17 of an “actual market price for [a security] at the time of suit” does not defeat an investor’s 18 plausible claim of injury from misleading statements contained in that security’s offering

¹⁵ It may well be that, ultimately, the Fund will recover nothing because defendants will prove that any diminution in value is attributable to, e.g., (1) illiquidity, (2) the global financial crisis, or (3) a widening of credit spreads rather than defendants’ misrepresentations. But that is irrelevant to whether plaintiff has alleged, at the pleading stage, a cognizable injury under the statute.

1 documents. NECA-IBEW, 743 F. Supp. 2d at 292. The value of a security is not unascertainable
2 simply because it trades in an illiquid market and therefore has no “actual market price.” Indeed, 3 valuing illiquid assets is an important (and routine) activity for asset managers, an activity
4 typically guided by Statement 157 of the Financial Accounting Standards Board (“FAS 157”).¹⁶ 5 Moreover, the fact that financial valuation may be difficult or “involve[] the exercise of 6 judgment” – as defendants observe to be the case with the “complex asset-backed instruments at 7 issue here” – does not render plaintiff’s allegations of loss of value fatally conclusory. See 8 Appellees’ Br. 32 (quotation marks omitted).

9 For these reasons, the judgment of the district court dismissing plaintiff’s § 11 claims is 10 vacated and the claims are reinstated. On remand, the court should afford plaintiff leave to 11 replead, inter alia, “the price at which [the 2007-10 Class 1AV1 Certificates] shall have been 12 disposed of after suit but before judgment,” 15 U.S.C. § 77k(e)(3), and to seek damages rather 13 than rescission for its § 12(a)(2) claim with respect to those Certificates, see id. § 77l(a)(2).
14

15 CONCLUSION

16 As stated above, the district court erred to the extent it held plaintiffs lacked class 17 standing to assert the claims of purchasers of certificates backed by mortgages originated by the 18 same lenders that originated the mortgages backing plaintiff’s certificates. The district court

¹⁶ Under the “fair value hierarchy” established by FAS 157, the highest priority “input” for valuing assets and liabilities is quoted prices in active markets for identical assets or liabilities. FAS 157 at 12. If such “Level 1” inputs are not available, “Level 2” inputs, such as quoted prices for similar assets or liabilities in active markets, should be used. Id. at 12-15. And if “Level 2” inputs are not available – such as when there is “little, if any, market activity for the asset or liability at the measurement date” – “unobservable” “Level 3” inputs, such as model assumptions that take market participant assumptions into account, should be used. Id. at 15.

1 further erred in requiring plaintiff to plead an out-of-pocket loss in order to allege a cognizable 2 diminution in the value of an illiquid security under § 11. Accordingly, we affirm in part and 3 vacate in part the judgment of the district court dismissing plaintiff's claims and remand with 4 instructions to reinstate plaintiff's §§ 11, 12(a)(2), and 15 claims in respect of the GSAA Home
5 Equity Trust 2007-3, 2007-4, 2007-5, 2007-6, 2007-7, and 2007-10 Offerings, and the GSR 6 Mortgage Loan Trust 2007-3F Offering.
