OPINION OF THE COURT

VAN ANTWERPEN, Circuit Judge.

Nigel Singh petitions for review of a final order of removal based on his conviction, under 18 U.S.C § 152(3), for knowingly making a false statement under penalty of perjury in a bankruptcy proceeding. The Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) determined that Singh's conviction was an offense involving fraud or deceit in which the loss to the victim exceeded $10,000, and hence an aggravated felony under 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43)(M)(i). In his petition, Singh argues that 18 U.S.C § 152(3) is a perjury offense that must meet the requirements for perjury-based aggravated felonies under 8 U.S.C § 1101(a)(43)(S). Singh further argues that, even if assessed under 8 U.S.C § 1101(a)(43)(M)(i), he is not removable because his offense did not cause an actual loss exceeding $10,000. While we reject Singh's first argument, we agree that under the unique facts of this case his offense did not cause an actual loss. Because we hold that § 1101(a)(43)(M)(i) requires an actual, not merely intended, loss, we will grant Singh's petition and vacate the order of removal.

I. FACTS & PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Singh was born in Jamaica on August 23, 1959, and has been a lawful permanent resident of the United States since December 7, 1975. Since that time, Singh has married a U.S. citizen and raised three U.S. children. In 1997, Singh founded the Raeback Corporation, a construction contracting firm that bid on public works projects as a Minority Business Enterprise (MBE). During his tenure as Raeback's president, Singh was asked on several occasions by a business contact at a non-MBE firm, U.S. Rebar, to help U.S. Rebar secure government contracts. In exchange for kickbacks, Singh falsely attested that Raeback was serving as a subcontractor on government projects when, in fact, U.S. Rebar did the subcontract work. Under the scheme, billing was done in Raeback's name and the general contractor paid Raeback, which then forwarded the payments to U.S. Rebar, less a ten percent kickback. One of the government entities that funded these projects was the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey ("Port Authority").

In September 2005, during the course of the Port Authority project, Raeback filed for bankruptcy due to losses on another project. Since the bankruptcy proceedings automatically froze Raeback's bank accounts, Singh and his contact agreed on an arrangement in which the contact would deposit the general contractor's checks and hold the funds for Singh during Raebach's bankruptcy.¹ Unbeknownst to Singh, however, his contact was a confidential informant for the Port Authority, which had begun investigating U.S. Rebar's arrangement with Raebach. Rather than holding the funds for Singh, therefore, the contact transferred the funds—approximately $54,000 in total—to the Port Authority.

When the Port Authority informed Singh of its investigation in 2007, Singh participated in two proffer sessions with law enforcement agents. During these sessions, agents learned of Raebach's bankruptcy proceeding. Agents also learned that Raebach's bankruptcy petition failed to disclose its revenue stream from the Port Authority project. Although the Port Authority did not take legal action against Singh, Singh was charged by the U.S. Attorney's Office in the Eastern District of New York for one count of "fail[ing] to disclose all of Raebach's accounts receivable on Raebach's bankruptcy petition," in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 152(3). Under § 152(3), it is a crime to "knowingly and fraudulently make[] a false declaration, certificate, verification, or statement under penalty of perjury" in relation to a bankruptcy proceeding. On June 24, 2009, Singh pled guilty. As part of the plea agreement, Singh agreed to "restitution in the amount of $54,418.08,” to be paid by transferring the money “held by the Port Authority” to the bankruptcy trustee.

At the time the plea agreement was entered, the U.S. Attorney believed Singh’s failure to disclose the Port Authority funds had caused “substantial interference with the administration of justice,” thus warranting a three-point sentencing enhancement under U.S.S.G. § 2J1.2(b)(2). Later, however, the U.S. Attorney informed the sentencing court that, “because the Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceedings are still ongoing and the bankruptcy trustee will receive the funds which the defendant attempted to secrete, the defendant’s crime will not affect the ultimate outcome of the bankruptcy proceedings.” App. at 298. The U.S. Attorney also informed the court that the trustee “did not expend any substantial additional resources as a result of the defendant’s fraud.” App. at 299. Based on these discoveries, the U.S. Attorney’s Office dropped its request for the three-point enhancement. Singh, meanwhile, emphasized the restitution agreement as a factor supporting his request for a non-incarceratory sentence.

On December 14, 2009, the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York sentenced Singh to ten months in prison. Although the court’s initial judgment did not mention restitution, an amended judgment issued on January 29, 2010 included a restitution order “pursuant to [the] plea agreement.” The terms of the court’s restitution order, identical in all relevant respects to the terms Singh agreed to in the plea, ordered that “the $54,418.08 currently held by the Port [A]uthority” be transferred to the trustee. On March 22, 2010, the funds were transferred to the trustee, and on January 19, 2011, the trustee distributed Raebach’s assets to its creditors.

Shortly after Singh began serving his sentence, the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) initiated removal proceedings by issuing him a Notice to Appear (NTA). In the NTA, the DHS charged that Singh's § 152(3) conviction involved a "loss or intended loss" to a victim or victims exceeding $10,000 and thus made him removable as an aggravated felon under 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)(A)(iii). App. at 343. Under § 1101(a)(43)(M)(i) (hereinafter, "subparagraph (M)(i)"), an aggravated felony is defined as an "offense that involves fraud or deceit in which the loss to the victim or victims exceeds $10,000." The Immigration Judge sustained DHS's charge and entered an order of removal, which the BIA affirmed on April 12, 2011. In an unpublished opinion, the BIA ruled that a conviction under § 152(3) "categorically involves fraud," as evident by our Court's determination of the crime's essential elements in United States v. Mathies, 350 F.2d 963 (3d Cir. 1965). The BIA also ruled that Singh's agreement to pay restitution and the sentencing court's restitution order provided clear and convincing evidence that Singh's offense caused a loss to the trustee exceeding $10,000.

After the BIA issued its order, we granted Singh's request for a stay so that we could consider his petition for review. In granting the stay, we cited the Second Circuit's decision in Pierre v. Holder, 588 F.3d 767 (2d Cir. 2009), where an intended loss exceeding $10,000 was held insufficient, as a matter of law, to satisfy the loss requirement of subparagraph (M)(i).

II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

Although 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(C) divests federal courts of jurisdiction to review orders of removal based on an alien's commission of an aggravated felony, this "jurisdiction-stripping provision" only applies if we are satisfied the petitioner is, in fact, an alien who has committed an aggravated felony. Valansi v. Ashcroft, 278 F.3d 203, 207 (3d Cir. 2002). Whether or not Singh committed an aggravated felony is a question of law which we review de novo. Bobb v. Att'y Gen., 458 F.3d 213, 217 (3d Cir. 2006). While we generally defer to the BIA's reasonable interpretations of the INA, "[w]e do not defer to the BIA's determination of whether a crime constitutes an aggravated felony." Henry v. Bureau of Immig. & Customs Enforcement, 493 F.3d 303, 306 (3d Cir. 2007). We also will not affirm a BIA order if it cannot be sustained on the grounds upon which the BIA relied, unless "it is highly probable" that the omission or error did not affect the outcome. Li Hua Yuan v. Att'y Gen., 642 F.3d 420, 427 (3d Cir. 2011).

Under the INA, "[a]ny alien who is convicted of an aggravated felony at any time after admission is deportable." 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)(A)(iii). An aggravated felony under subparagraph (M)(i) has two distinct elements: (1) it must be a crime that "involves fraud or deceit," (2) "in which the loss to the victim or victims exceeds $10,000." To determine whether a crime involves fraud or deceit, we must employ a "categorical approach" in which we focus on the crime's statutory elements "rather than . . . the specific facts underlying the crime." Kawashima v. Holder, 132 S. Ct. 1166, 1172 (2012). By contrast, we must use a "circumstance-specific" approach to determine whether the alien's offense involved a loss to a victim(s) exceeding $10,000, Nijhawan v. Holder, 129 S. Ct. 2294, 2300 (2009);

Kaplun v. Att’y Gen., 602 F.3d 260, 265 (3d Cir. 2010), wherein the loss must be “tethered” to the actual “offense of conviction,” not “acquitted or dismissed counts or general conduct,” Nijhawan, 129 S. Ct. at 2302; Alaka v. Att’y Gen., 456 F.3d 88, 106–08 (3d Cir. 2006).

III. DISCUSSION

A. Fraud or Deceit Requirement

We begin our analysis here by considering whether Singh was convicted of an offense that categorically involves fraud or deceit. As the Supreme Court has recently made clear, a crime involves fraud or deceit if it “necessarily entail[s] fraudulent or deceitful conduct.” Kawashima, 132 S. Ct. at 1172; accord Valansi, 278 F.3d at 210. For the reasons that follow, we hold that a conviction under 18 U.S.C. § 152(3) necessarily entails deceit and therefore qualifies as a deceit offense under 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43)(M)(i).

To violate 18 U.S.C. § 152(3), one must “knowingly and fraudulently make a false declaration . . . under penalty of perjury” in relation to a bankruptcy proceeding. This Court has previously interpreted the phrase “knowingly and fraudulently” in § 152(3) as requiring an intent to defraud. In re Topper, 229 F.2d 691, 692 (3d Cir. 1956) (interpreting § 152(3) as requiring “actual intent on the part of the bankrupt to hinder, delay and defraud his creditors”); see also Mathies, 350 F.2d at 967. As Singh correctly notes, however, the jurisdiction in which he was convicted (the Second Circuit) interprets § 152(3) differently than we do. Under the Second Circuit’s interpretation, “the words of the statute requiring that the testimony be given ‘knowingly and fraudulently’ mean no more than an intentional untruth in a matter material to the issue which is itself material.”² In re Robinson, 506 F.2d 1184, 1187 (2d Cir. 1974) (internal quotation marks omitted). In the Second Circuit, therefore, “only the basic requirements of perjury need to be proven.”³ Id. at 1189. Singh thus contends that the BIA erred in concluding that § 152(3) “categorically involves fraud.” Even if Singh is correct, however, it would not change the result here because the Second Circuit’s definition of § 152(3) necessarily requires deceit. As noted in Kawashima, the word “deceit” refers to “the act or process of deceiving (as by falsification, concealment or cheating).” 132 S. Ct. at 1172. The Second Circuit’s element of “knowingly” making a “false statement” fits this definition.⁴ Thus, irrespective of which statutory

² The Second Circuit’s interpretation of § 152(3) is not necessarily at odds with the plain meaning of the word “fraudulently,” as the word “fraudulent” has at least two distinctly different meanings. On one hand, a fraudulent statement is one that is “made . . . with the purpose or design to carry out a fraud.” BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY 596 (5th ed. 1979). A statement is also fraudulent, however, if it is made with the simple intent to deceive. See id. (“A statement, or claim, or document, is ‘fraudulent’ if it was falsely made, or caused to be made, with the intent to deceive.”).

⁴ The Supreme Court addressed an analogous situation in Kawashima. There, the petitioner had been convicted of filing a false tax return under 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1), which elements we use, § 152(3) qualifies under subparagraph (M)(i) as an offense that involves deceit.

B. Subparagraph (S) Considerations

Singh also argues that because the Second Circuit considers § 152(3) to be “essentially equivalent to a perjury statute,” Robinson, 506 F.2d at 1189, he cannot be removable because his offense does not qualify under the INA’s provision for perjury-based aggravated felonies, 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43)(S) (hereinafter, “subparagraph (S)”).⁵ Singh bases this position on Congress’s purported intent when enacting subparagraph (S) and the “basic rule” that “the specific statutory provision . . . should prevail over the more general.” Appellant’s Br. at 23. This argument is at odds with our precedent.

As we made clear in Valansi, “[w]hen the statutory language [of the INA] has a clear meaning, we need not look further.” 278 F.3d at 214. In Valansi, the petitioner argued that her conviction for embezzlement was a theft offense and established that the petitioner “knowingly and willfully submitted a tax return that was false as to a material matter.” Kawashima, 132 S. Ct. at 1172. The Supreme Court concluded that the offense necessarily involved deceit, irrespective of whether the statute actually used the word “deceit.” Id.

could only be an aggravated felony if it satisfied the INA's specific criteria for theft offenses under subparagraph (G). Id. at 213. We rejected this “all-or-nothing” argument because the “plain meaning of [subparagraph (M)(i)] suggests that embezzlement with intent to defraud would qualify as an offense that ‘involves fraud or deceit.’” Id. at 214. A similar situation applies here, as the plain meaning of subparagraph (M)(i) encompasses offenses, such as § 152(3), that involve knowingly making false statements. Under Valansi we need not look further.

C. The Loss Requirement

We turn now to the issue of whether Singh's offense was one in which the loss to the victim exceeded $10,000. Our determination depends in part on whether the government must prove actual loss, or merely an intended or potential loss. We begin, therefore, by considering the meaning of subparagraph (M)(i)'s requirement that there be a “loss to the victim or victims.” As we noted in granting Singh's request to stay removal, the Second Circuit holds that subparagraph (M)(i) requires the loss to be an actual one. See Pierre, 588 F.3d at 773 (citing Ming Lam Sui v. INS, 250 F.3d 105, 119 (2d Cir. 2001)). For the reasons that follow, we agree with the Second Circuit.

Since the INA does not define the term loss, we must interpret the word according to its ordinary meaning at the time Congress enacted subparagraph (M)(i). See Robinson v. Napolitano, 554 F.3d 358, 365 (3d Cir. 2009) (“A fundamental canon of statutory construction is that, unless otherwise defined, words will be interpreted as taking their ordinary, contemporary, common meaning at the time Congress enacted the statute.” (quoting Perrin v. United States, 444 U.S. 37, 42 (1979))). Thus, because subparagraph (M)(i) was enacted by Congress in 1994,⁶ we will consider the ordinary meaning of loss as of that time.

The 1993 edition of Webster’s New International Dictionary provides numerous definitions of loss, along with illustrative examples. Each of these definitions, and their corresponding examples, refer to loss that actually occurs. See WEBSTER’S THIRD NEW INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY 1338 (1993). Loss is defined, for example, as: (a) “the act or fact of losing”; (b) “a person or thing or an amount that is lost”; (c) “the act or fact of failing to gain, win, obtain, or utilize”; (d) a “decrease in amount, magnitude, or degree”; (e) “the state or fact of being destroyed or placed beyond recovery”; and (f) “the amount of an insured’s financial detriment due to the occurrence of a stipulated contingent event.” Corresponding examples to illustrate these definitions include: (a) “loss of a leg”; (b) “killed, wounded, or captured soldiers”; (c) “loss of opportunity”; (d) “altitude loss”; (e) “loss of life in war”; and (f) financial detriment caused by “death, injury, destruction, or damage.” Importantly, not one of these definitions or examples refers to potential loss; even where loss refers to a failure to gain, the loss is characterized as having already occurred (e.g., loss of a battle).

Consistent with Webster’s definition, this Court stated in 1991 that the “ordinary meaning” of loss is “actual loss,” not “probable” or “intended loss.” United States v. Kopp, 951

F.2d 521, 529 (3d Cir. 1991) (superseded by statute on other grounds). We conclude, therefore, that when Congress enacted subparagraph (M)(i), the plain meaning of loss referred to actual, not merely intended, loss. Accordingly, because neither subparagraph (M)(i) nor paragraph (43) expand loss's ordinary meaning, we hold that subparagraph (M)(i) requires actual loss. Accord Kharana v. Gonzales, 487 F.3d 1280, 1282 n.3 (9th Cir. 2007) (“[I]nterpreting § 101(a)(43)(M)(i) such that a conviction involving an unsuccessful attempt to obtain more than $10,000 counts as a conviction ‘in which the loss to the victim or victims exceeds $10,000’ flies in the face of the plain meaning of the statute.”).

Although some have argued that subparagraph (M)(i) should include intended loss, the reasons for overriding the statute's plain meaning are unconvincing. The concurrence in Kharana advanced the argument, for example, that because loss under subparagraph (U) has been interpreted to include intended loss, see Matter of S-I-K, 24 I. & N. Dec. 324 (BIA 2007) and Matter of Onyido, 22 I. & N. Dec. 552 (BIA 1999), loss under subparagraph (M)(i) should be read to include intended loss as well.⁷ Kharana, 487 F.3d at 1286 (Wallace, J., concurring). The Kharana concurrence reasons that because subparagraph (U) does not provide “additional gloss” on the word, loss's meaning under (U) “applies with equal force” to subparagraph (M)(i). Id. There are several problems with this argument. Subparagraph (U) defines an aggravated felony as “an attempt or conspiracy to commit an offense described in this paragraph.” 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43)(U). Since subparagraph (U) does not mention the word loss, it is hardly significant that (U) does not provide “additional gloss” on the word itself. Further, we question the premise that subparagraph (U) does not provide any additional gloss. After all, the reason the BIA interpreted subparagraph (U) to include intended loss is because (U) includes the word “attempt,” a word not present in (M). See Onyido, 22 I. & N. at 553. There is a clear textual reason, therefore, why loss under subparagraph (U) should not “apply with equal force” to subparagraph (M)(i). Whereas subparagraph (U) expressly applies to attempts and conspiracies to commit crimes of deceit, subparagraph (M)(i) applies to consummated crimes of deceit. The BIA determined that intended loss is relevant under subparagraph (U) because, by definition, an attempt to commit a crime does not require the crime to be successfully carried out. See id. This rationale does not apply to completed offenses under subparagraph (M)(i). In short, the fact that the BIA has held that actual loss is unnecessary under subparagraph (U), does not mean that actual loss must be unnecessary under (M)(i).

Along with the Kharana concurrence, the Seventh Circuit has suggested, in dicta, that subparagraph (M)(i) should be interpreted to encompass intended loss. See Eke v. Mukasey, 512 F.3d 372, 380 (7th Cir. 2008). The Seventh Circuit suggests that this interpretation would be reasonable because it is consistent with the Sentencing Guidelines’ definition of loss for fraud and deceit crimes under U.S.S.G. § 2B1.1. Id. This argument is also unpersuasive. The statutory language of subparagraph (M)(i) provides no indication that Congress wanted loss to be defined in accordance with the Sentencing Guidelines. As the Kharana concurrence observed, the Guidelines and the INA are like “apples and oranges.” See Kharana, 487 F.3d at 1287 (Wallace, J., concurring). Not only are they written by different bodies (one by a non-legislative commission, one by Congress), but they serve distinctly different purposes (one penological, one civil).⁸ Although we have recognized that there might be occasions where the Guidelines can help “divine Congress’s intent when passing the INA,” no such guidance is necessary when the INA’s statutory language “has a clear meaning.” Valansi, 278 F.3d at 213–14. Indeed, “[w]hen we find the terms of a statute unambiguous, judicial inquiry is complete, except in rare and exceptional circumstances.” Rubin v. United States, 499 U.S. 424, 430 (1981) (citations omitted). Here, there are no rare or exceptional circumstances that compel us to override subparagraph (M)(i)’s plain meaning.

D. The Actual Loss from Singh’s Offense

Having determined that subparagraph (M)(i) requires actual loss, we now turn to the “specific circumstances” of Singh’s offense to determine if the government has proved by “clear and convincing” evidence that his offense involved an actual loss to a victim, or victims, that exceeds $10,000. Nijhawan, 129 S. Ct. at 2302–03. We begin by laying out the parameters of the circumstance-specific approach.

Although “not an invitation to relitigate the conviction itself,” Kaplun, 602 F.3d at 266, the circumstance-specific approach goes beyond the “modified-categorical approach” that is used for determining which elements of a disjunctive statute an individual was convicted of committing. See Nijhawan, 129 S. Ct. at 2302 (citing Shepard v. United States, 544 U.S. 13 (2005) and Taylor v. United States, 495 U.S. 575 (1990)). For example, whereas the modified-categorical approach is limited to the record of conviction (e.g., indictment, plea agreement, criminal judgment, etc) and judicial findings of fact, Alaka, 456 F.3d at 106, the circumstance-specific approach may consider “sentencing-related material,” Nijhawan, 129 S. Ct. at 2302–03. Accord Matter of Babaisakov, 24 I. & N. Dec. 306, 306 (BIA 2007). The guiding principle for the circumstance-specific analysis is that immigration courts must use “fundamentally fair procedures, including procedures that give an alien a fair opportunity to dispute a Government claim that a prior conviction involved a fraud with the relevant loss to victims.” Nijhawan, 129 S. Ct. at 2303.

Here, the government argues that the circumstance-specific approach proves the existence of a loss that exceeds $10,000. The government’s primary argument is that, on its face, the restitution order is clear and convincing evidence of actual loss because restitution orders are limited to “actual losses that resulted from the offense of conviction.” Gov’t Br. at 28. The government also argues that the circumstances of the case prove that Singh caused an actual, if temporary, deprivation of $54,000 of assets to the bankruptcy trustee.

1. The Restitution Order

According to the government, the very fact that the sentencing court issued a restitution order of $54,000 is proof positive that the requisite actual loss occurred.⁹ The government reaches this conclusion based on a misapplication of the federal statutes governing restitution orders by federal courts: the Mandatory Victims Restitution Act (MVRA), 18 U.S.C. § 3663A, and the Victim and Witness Protection Act (VWPA), 18 U.S.C. § 3663.¹⁰ Under the MVRA, a federal sentencing court “shall order” restitution for certain offenses, but only if the court finds that “an identifiable victim or victims has suffered a physical injury or pecuniary loss” as a “direct[] and proximate[]” result of the offense. §§ 3663A(a)(2), (c)(1)(B). Offenses involving “fraud or deceit” are included under the MVRA, § 3663A(c)(1)(A), and, as the government notes, violations of § 152(3) have “generally” qualified as such.¹¹ Further, as the government points out, courts ordering restitution under the MVRA are limited to remedying the actual loss caused by the defendant's "offense of conviction." Hughey v. United States, 495 U.S. 411, 413 (1990).¹² Ergo, the government concludes that the sentencing court's restitution order of $54,000 here is ipso facto evidence that Singh caused an actual loss to a victim exceeding $10,000.

⁹ The BIA made this argument in its opinion as well. However, in contrast to the BIA (which devoted just one sentence to the issue), the government made this the centerpiece of its case. Accordingly, we focus our analysis here on the government’s argument.

The government's argument fails, however, for three reasons. First, its reliance on the MVRA is misplaced because the record shows that the sentencing court issued restitution pursuant to an express agreement by the parties, not the MVRA. Second, the law governing restitution issued pursuant to a party agreement shows that such orders are not limited to actual losses from the offense of conviction. Third, even if the court's restitution order reflected a judicial finding of loss, Nijhawan and our own precedent make clear that we need not take the order at face value for removal purposes, particularly when, as here, it conflicts with undisputed facts in the sentencing material. We will address each of these three reasons in turn.

First, the government's reliance on the MVRA is misplaced because it is doubtful the sentencing court issued restitution under the MVRA. The sentencing court was only required to issue restitution under the MVRA if, and only if, the court determined that Singh's offense caused "a physical injury or pecuniary loss" to a "victim." § 3663A(c). This is significant because it is unlikely that the bankruptcy trustee here actually qualified as a victim under the MVRA. Although the government cites United States v. Holthaus, 486 F.3d 451, 457–58 (8th Cir. 2007), for the proposition that bankruptcy trustees can be victims of § 152(3) violations, it omits the fact that Holthaus limited this holding to trustees whose "compensation" has been "negatively impacted." Id. (adopting rule set forth by the Seventh Circuit in United States v. Lowell, 256 F.3d 463, 465–66 (7th Cir. 2001)); see also United States v. Paradis, 219 F.3d 22, 25 (1st Cir. 2000) (holding that trustee is not a victim of bankruptcy fraud under MVRA where defendant concealed funds that would go to the creditors). Here, the government agreed at sentencing that the trustee "did not expend any substantial additional resources as a result of the defendant's fraud." App. at 298–99. It is unlikely, therefore, that the sentencing court determined the trustee to be a victim with an actual loss under the MVRA, particularly since there is nothing in the record of conviction indicating it deliberated on this otherwise novel ruling.

Another factor suggesting that the MVRA was not the statutory framework for the restitution order is the fact that the court expressly stated that it issued the order “pursuant to [the] plea agreement.” App. at 195. This suggests the order was issued under § 3663(a)(3) of the VWPA, since that provision allows sentencing courts to order restitution “in any criminal case to the extent agreed to by the parties in a plea agreement.” § 3663(a)(3) (emphasis added). Supporting this view is the fact that the sentencing court does not appear to have demonstrated its consideration of the statutory factors under 18 U.S.C. § 3664(a), as courts in the Second Circuit are required to do when issuing restitution in the absence of an agreement. See United States v. Harris, 79 F.3d 223, 232–33 (2d Cir. 1996). Accordingly, we do not agree with the government’s argument that the sentencing court was required to, or did in fact, issue restitution pursuant to the MVRA.¹³

Second, the fact that the sentencing court issued its order “pursuant to [the] plea agreement” is significant because, in the Second Circuit, restitution is not limited to actual loss caused by the offense of conviction when issued pursuant to an agreement. United States v. Silkowski, 32 F.3d 682, 688–89 (2d Cir. 1994). This Court and several other courts of appeals have recognized this prevailing rule. United States v. Akande, 200 F.3d 136, 140 n.3 (3d Cir. 1999) (“Restitution is limited to amounts ‘directly caused by the conduct composing the offense of conviction,’ or those amounts that defendant ‘expressly agree[s] to’ pursuant to the plea agreement.” (quoting Silkowski, 32 F.3d at 689)); United States v. Maturin, 488 F.3d 657, 661 (5th Cir. 2007); United States v. Broughton-Jones, 71 F.3d 1143, 1147–48 (4th Cir. 1995); United States v. Schrimsher, 58 F.3d 610, 611 (11th Cir. 1995); United States v. Soderling, 970 F.2d 529, 533 (9th Cir. 1992). The government is thus incorrect when it asserts that “[u]nder either the MVRA or the VWPA, the restitution award can encompass only actual losses that resulted from the offense of conviction.” Gov’t Br. at 28 (citing Hughey, 495 U.S. at 420; United States v. Zakhary, 357 F.3d 186, 190–91 (2d Cir. 2004); Feldman, 338 F.3d at 220; United States v. Badaracco, 954 F.2d 928, 942 (3d Cir. 1992)). Importantly, all of the cases the government cites to support its position are cases where the court ordered restitution in the absence of an agreement by the parties.¹⁴ See Hughey, 495 U.S. at 413–15; Zakhary, 357 F.3d at 188–89; Feldman, 338 F.3d at 214–15; Badaracco, 954 F.2d at 930. Accordingly, because the sentencing court ordered restitution pursuant to Singh’s express agreement, the government’s argument is based on inapposite law.

Third, to the extent that the restitution order reflects the sentencing court’s determination of actual loss, Nijhawan and our precedent make clear that immigration courts are not bound to accept this determination at face value. Under ¹⁴ The BIA made the same error. In its opinion, it cites United States v. Diaz, 245 F.3d 294, 312 (3d Cir. 2001), for the proposition that “a court’s power to order restitution is limited to actual loss.” App. at 4. As with the cases cited by the government, the sentencing court in Diaz did not issue the restitution order pursuant to the parties’ express agreement. See Diaz, 245 F.3d at 296.

Nijhawan, a restitution order must be assessed in the context of “conflicting evidence.” 129 S. Ct. at 2303. Since the petitioner in Nijhawan did not point to “any” conflicting evidence, the Court ruled that a restitution order for $683 million coupled with the defendant’s stipulation that his offense caused more than $100 million in loss was sufficient to meet the government’s burden. Id. at 2298, 2303. Consistent with Nijhawan, we have taken the position that a restitution order “may be helpful” to the loss inquiry, but is not definitive. Munroe v. Ashcroft, 353 F.3d 225, 227 (3d Cir. 2003). In Munroe, the sentencing court issued an amended restitution order of $9,999 in a thinly veiled attempt “to alter the effect of the conviction for immigration purposes.” Id. at 226–27. Because we found it “abundantly clear” from the record (e.g., the indictment, guilty plea, and initial restitution order) that the defendant’s offense caused a loss exceeding $10,000, we refused to let the amended restitution order be controlling. Id. As with Munroe, the circumstances here—which we discuss below—make it “abundantly clear” that the restitution in the court’s amended judgment does not reflect the actual loss resulting from Singh’s offense. In other words, there is sufficient “conflicting evidence” to justify looking past the restitution order.

Despite Nijhawan and Munroe, the government contends that Singh is collaterally estopped from challenging the validity of the order. The government bases this argument on the Fifth Circuit’s decision in Patel v. Mukasey, 526 F.3d 800 (5th Cir. 2008). Patel, however, was decided before Nijhawan, and its current viability appears tenuous to us. In Nijhawan, the Court stated that petitioners, including those challenging restitution orders, “have at least one and possibly two opportunities to contest the amount of loss, the first at the earlier sentencing and the second at the deportation hearing itself.” 129 S. Ct. at 2303. Further, the Nijhawan Court sided with the government, not because the petitioner was estopped from challenging his restitution order, but because he failed to point to sufficient evidence to cast doubt upon it. See id. Unlike the petitioner in Nijhawan, the petitioner here has pointed to undisputed facts in the sentencing material that undermine the restitution order’s reliability as a measure of actual loss.¹⁵ We will now discuss this evidence.

2. Specific Offense Circumstances

At the time Singh committed his offense of conviction (i.e., knowingly making a false statement in relation to Raebach’s bankruptcy petition), the money that he failed to disclose was in the custody of the Port Authority and beyond his control. While Singh may have subjectively believed his criminal act would enable him to obtain this money, in reality this was just as impossible as the failed attempt in Onyido, ¹⁵ This applies to the restitution agreement as well. Although this Court has previously stated that an amount agreed to in a plea agreement provides the definitive measure of loss, we did so in the context of a modified-categorical analysis. See Alaka, 456 F.3d at 108; see also Nijhawan v. Att’y Gen., 523 F.3d 387, 394 (3d Cir. 2008) (citing Alaka for proposition that where defendant pleads to a specific loss amount, “that amount is controlling”). Since the Supreme Court has rejected using the modified-categorical approach for determining loss under subparagraph (M)(i), Nijhawan, 129 S. Ct. at 2302–03, the Alaka rule does not limit our inquiry here.

where the BIA accepted that the loss was only intended, not actual. See 22 I. & N. Dec. 552. In Onyido, the DHS sought to remove the petitioner based on his conviction for filing a false claim with the intent to defraud an insurance company. Id. at 553. Onyido was convicted for signing paperwork to process a fraudulent $15,000 claim in the presence of people he believed were insurance agents, but were in fact undercover officers. Id. Although the facts are somewhat more complicated here, we find them to be functionally equivalent to Onyido. For starters, both cases involve situations where, at the moment the crime was consummated, a government sting operation made any intended benefit impossible. Since the Port Authority had custody of the funds, basic principles of property law precluded Singh from having any capacity to use this money for his benefit.¹⁶ The fact that Singh “agreed” to have this money transferred to the trustee as restitution was thus only a formality—one in which he had nothing to lose, but potentially much to gain.¹⁷

The impossibility of Singh’s intended¹⁸ outcome does not end our inquiry, however, because it is obviously possible that Singh’s offense could have still caused actual losses. It is conceivable, for example, that Singh’s offense could have produced incidental losses for the bankruptcy trustee by forcing him to spend additional money and time accessing the re Quality Holstein Leasing, 752 F.2d 1009, 1013 (5th Cir. 1985). It is designed, instead, to ensure equal treatment of creditors, each of whom “has suffered disappointed expectations at the hands of the debtor.” Omeegas Group, 16 F.3d at 1452.

$54,000. The record, however, does not demonstrate any such loss. Indeed, as the U.S. Attorney conceded in the sentencing memorandum, the trustee “did not expend any substantial additional resources as a result of the defendant’s fraud.” App at 298–99. Thus, under the metric that federal courts of appeals have used for determining if bankruptcy trustees have suffered pecuniary harm, Holthaus, 486 F.3d at 457–58; Lowell, 256 F.3d at 465–66; Paradis, 219 F.3d at 25, the trustee in this case suffered no identifiable loss.

It is also conceivable that Singh’s offense may have resulted in actual losses for the creditors. Had the Port Authority, for example, not learned of Singh’s bankruptcy proceedings, the trustee may never have learned about the $54,000, and, consequently, the creditors could have had a smaller estate from which to recover on their claims. Again, however, the record shows that this potential loss did not actually occur, since the Port Authority transferred the funds to the trustee prior to the distribution of Raebach’s assets. As noted in the U.S. Attorney’s sentencing memorandum, “the bankruptcy trustee will receive the funds which the defendant attempted to secrete,” and thus, “the defendant’s crime will not affect the ultimate outcome of the bankruptcy proceedings.” App. at 298 (emphases added).

Although Singh’s offense did not deprive the creditors of assets, the government argues that Singh’s offense caused an actual loss by depriving the trustee. To support this argument, the government contrasts this case with the intended loss at issue in Pierre, where the petitioner was convicted of bank fraud for submitting fraudulent documents to obtain a $500,000 loan from a bank. 588 F.3d at 770. As the government notes, the bank in Pierre detected the fraud before loaning any money, and was thus never deprived of any property for any period of time. By contrast, the government argues that Singh's offense deprived the trustee of $54,000 from Raebach's estate.¹⁹ What the government omits, however, is that the trustee, unlike the bank in Pierre, was not a party that stood to lose from the deprivation itself (as compared to the incidental effects thereof). Instead, the only people who stood to lose were Raebach's creditors, and thus the deprivation should be assessed against them, not the trustee. Accordingly, because the creditors were not deprived of any property for any length of time, the fact that the trustee was temporarily unable to access all of Raebach's assets does not constitute an actual loss to an actual victim.

While the government is correct that the creditors may have suffered a loss if Singh was never caught, the same is equally true for the potential victim in Pierre. Indeed, the government's argument that Singh should not benefit from the fortuitous fact that he was caught before his creditors were harmed overlooks the reality that such fortuitous facts are inherent to all intended loss. While an intended loss may itself provide grounds for removal,²⁰ we are bound here to follow the statutory language of subparagraph (M)(i), which requires actual loss.

Finally, we wish to make clear that our conclusion does not mean, as the government contends, that an alien defendant can avoid a finding of actual loss for removal purposes simply by paying restitution after getting caught. Indeed, we agree with the government that payment of restitution should not, and does not, negate a loss that actually occurred. Our holding here is a narrow one, involving an offense that at no point resulted in an actual loss to any victim for any length of time. To highlight the narrowness of this rule, consider the result in a situation like Pierre had the bank not detected the fraud. If a bank gives a person a loan under false pretenses, then no matter how soon afterwards it detects the fraud, whether one minute or one year, an actual loss results because the person obtains possession of the loan at the direct deprivation of the bank. It doesn't matter how fleetingly the person obtains control. If the person's offense deprives the defrauded party of property, an actual loss occurs to an actual victim under subparagraph (M)(i).

Contrary to the government's suggestion at oral argument, therefore, nothing in this opinion will change the result in Nijhawan and other cases where restitution was paid after the petitioner's offense caused an actual loss. In Nijhawan, the petitioner was convicted of a fraudulent scheme that deceived banks into giving over $100 million dollars to the petitioner and his co-defendants. 523 F.3d 387, 389 (3d Cir. 2008). Unlike the situation here, there was no government sting operation that doomed the scheme from its inception, the petitioner obtained control of the money, and the victims that stood to directly lose from being deprived of the money (i.e., the banks) were in fact deprived. Irrespective, therefore, of whether the petitioner in Nijhawan paid full restitution for his crime, nothing in this opinion would change the outcome of that case, nor others like it.

In summary, the undisputed circumstances of this case show that a government sting operation (a) doomed any intended benefit when the crime was committed, and (b) prevented any potential or incidental losses from in fact occurring. This observation is the same whether we focus our inquiry at the time the court ordered restitution; at the time Singh was charged; or, as, the government implores us, at the time Singh committed the offense. At any of these times, the record shows that: (a) a government entity (the Port Authority) had custody of the money; (b) Singh had no capacity to obtain this money for his personal benefit; (c) the trustee's personal compensation had not been affected; and (d) the creditors had not been deprived of any property for any length of time. Under this set of circumstances, we find that no actual loss occurred.

E. Additional Considerations

Since the government has failed to provide clear and convincing evidence that Singh's offense caused an actual loss exceeding $10,000, Singh is not removable under subparagraph (M)(i). Although it is possible that Singh may be removable under subparagraph (U), the DHS only charged him under (M). This is important because Singh has a due process right to receive notice of “[t]he charges against [him] and the statutory provisions alleged to have been violated.” 8 U.S.C. § 1229(a); see also United States v. Torres, 383 F.3d 92, 104 (3d Cir. 2004) (stating that, under the Constitution, aliens have right to receive “notice of the charges” against them and a “fair opportunity to be heard”). Further, since removability under (U) would involve questions that neither Singh nor this Court have had an opportunity to address, it appears that a sua sponte invocation of (U) at this late stage in the litigation would prejudice Singh’s rights. See Pierre, 588 F.3d at 776–77 (holding that BIA’s sua sponte invocation of subparagraph (U) as basis for removal violated petitioner’s due process rights); see also Ming Lam Sui, 250 F.3d at 113–19 (addressing questions unique to a removability analysis under subparagraph (U)). Our inquiry here, therefore, is at its end.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we will grant Singh’s petition for review and vacate the BIA’s order of removal.
