PER CURIAM

Lisa Smith-Goodman appeals the District Court's order dismissing her Second Amended Complaint. For the reasons below, we will affirm the District Court's judgment.

The procedural history of this case and the details of Smith-Goodman's claims are well-known to the parties, set forth in the District Court's memorandum, and need not be discussed at length. Briefly, in her Second Amended Complaint, Smith-Goodman challenged state court proceedings in which the Court of Common Pleas of Philadelphia County terminated her guardianship of a child who is not her biological daughter. She argued that the City of Philadelphia's policy of reuniting children with their biological parents denied her due process. Appellees filed motions to dismiss which the District Court granted. Smith-Goodman filed a timely notice of appeal, and we have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

In her brief, Smith-Goodman argues that she was denied due process during an August 2018 hearing that resulted in the suspension of her guardianship of the child. She asserts that she and her attorney were sequestered during the August 2018 hearing and not afforded due process for the remainder of the proceedings. Smith-Goodman, however, did not include this allegation in her Second Amended Complaint and cannot raise it now. See Webb v. City of Philadelphia, 562 F.3d 256, 263 (3d Cir. 2009) (failure to raise issue results in waiver); United States v. Anthony Dell'Aquila, Enters. and Subsidiaries, 150 F.3d 329, 335 (3d Cir. 1998) (“[A]bsent exceptional circumstances, an issue not raised in district court will not be heard on appeal.”). We note that Smith-Goodman was represented by an attorney during that hearing and did not appeal the order suspending her guardianship.

Smith-Goodman also argues in her brief that she was denied due process on February 12, 2019, when the state court held an ex parte hearing and ordered her to have no contact with the child. This allegation, however, was also not included in the Second Amended Complaint filed months before the hearing occurred. For the same reasons as those described above, we decline to review this allegation.¹

Smith-Goodman argues that at oral argument in the District Court, Appellees committed fraud on the District Court when they referred to her as a foster parent. She claims she was not a foster parent because she shared physical and legal custody of the child; thus, she argues, she was entitled to due process. However, Smith-Goodman does not claim that she was prevented from presenting her arguments to the District Court in support of her contention. Nor does she explain how the description of her status affected the District Court's decision. The District Court assumed for the sake of argument that Smith-Goodman did have a protected interest in custody of the child and concluded that she had not been denied due process.

Finally, Smith-Goodman asks us to review the entire record and decide if her right to due process was violated. However, we do not consider undeveloped arguments or those not properly raised and discussed in a brief. See Doebler's Pa. Hybrids, Inc. v. Doeblner, 442 F.3d 812, 821 n.10 (3d Cir. 2006) (noting that "passing and conclusory statements do not preserve an issue for appeal"); DeSilva v. DiLeonardi, 181 F.3d 865, 867 (7th Cir. 1999) ("A brief must make all arguments accessible to the judges, rather than ask them to play archaeologist with the record.")

For the above reasons, as well as those set forth by the District Court, we will affirm the District Court's judgment. The Appellees' motions to stay appeal and the briefing schedule pending state court proceedings are denied.
