PER CURIAM:

James William Gaston was convicted, following a jury trial, of conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute cocaine and cocaine base, three counts of possession with intent to distribute cocaine base, and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon. Based on his prior convictions for either violent or drug trafficking felonies, as noticed by the 21 U.S.C. § 851 (2000) information filed by the government, Gaston was found to be an armed career criminal. The district court imposed a life sentence as mandated by 21 U.S.C. §§ 841(b)(1)(A), 851 (2000). Gaston appeals his sentence, arguing that his constitutional rights were violated because his sentence was increased based on a prior conviction not alleged in the indictment, found by the jury, or stipulated to by him. We affirm.

Gaston concedes that the Supreme Court ruled, in Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224 (1998), that the penalty provision of a statute enhancing a sentence based on recidivism is not an element of the crime and prior convictions need not be alleged in the indictment and found by the jury. However, he contends that Almendarez-Torres was called into question by the Supreme Court's opinion in Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000), and its progeny and should no longer be considered binding precedent. Although Apprendi expressed some uncertainty regarding the future vitality of Almendarez-Torres, we subsequently concluded that Almendarez-Torres was not overruled by Apprendi, and remains the law. United States v. Sterling, 283 F.3d 216, 220 (4th Cir. 2002); see also United States v. Cheek, 415 F.3d 349, 352-53 (4th Cir. 2005) (reaffirming continuing validity of Almendarez-Torres after United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220 (2005)). We therefore conclude that Gaston's claim is without merit. Moreover, as this court noted in Cheek, even if we were to agree with Gaston's forecast that the Supreme Court will overrule Almendarez-Torres, "we are not free to overrule or ignore the Supreme Court's precedents." Cheek, 415 F.3d at 352-53 (citing State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 20 (1997) ("[I]t is [the Supreme] Court's prerogative alone to overrule one of its precedents.")).

Accordingly, we affirm Gaston's sentence. We dispense with oral argument because the facts and legal contentions are adequately presented in the materials before the court and argument would not aid the decisional process.
