Before STEWART, Chief Judge, and DENNIS and HAYNES,* Circuit Judges.

PER CURIAM:

Claudio Perez-Miramontes pleaded guilty to being found in the United States after previous deportation. The district court imposed a 65-month sentence of imprisonment, which was above the advisory guidelines range. Perez-Miramontes argues that his sentence is substantively unreasonable because the district court gave “undue, significant weight to its unfounded belief that [he] may have ‘exposed others’” to his medical condition.

Perez-Miramontes’s argument fails for two reasons. Underlying the district court’s allegedly “unfounded belief” is its factual determination that Perez-Miramontes may have exposed others to his medical condition. Because Perez-Miramontes did not object to this factual finding, he cannot establish plain error. See United States v. Illies, 805 F.3d 607, 609 (5th Cir. 2015); United States v. Lopez, 923 F.2d 47, 50 (5th Cir. 1991). Second, it is evident from the record that the district court was concerned with Perez-Miramontes’s recidivism and that it chose to impose the variance due to Perez-Miramontes’s criminal history, to protect the public, to promote respect for the law, and to afford adequate deterrence. See United States v. Brantley, 537 F.3d 347, 350 (2008). Perez-Miramontes’s disagreement with the district court’s weighing of the factors is insufficient to demonstrate an abuse of discretion. See Gall v. United States, 552 U.S. 38, 51 (2007). Given the significant deference that is due to a district court’s consideration of the § 3553(a) factors and the district court’s explanation of its sentencing decision, Perez-Miramontes has not demonstrated that his 65-month sentence is substantively unreasonable. See Brantley, 537 F.3d at 349; United States v. McElwee, 646 F.3d 328, 337 (5th Cir. 2011). Accordingly, the judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED.
