

NONPRECEDENTIAL DISPOSITION
To be cited only in accordance with Fed. R. App. P. 32.1

United States Court of Appeals
For the Seventh Circuit
Chicago, Illinois 60604

Argued January 29, 2020
Decided February 14, 2020

Before

WILLIAM J. BAUER, Circuit Judge

FRANK H. EASTERBROOK, Circuit Judge

MICHAEL B. BRENNAN, Circuit Judge

Nos. 17-1034, 17-1035 & 17-1426

JUAN VELEZ, JUAN DEJESUS
& JOSHUA VIDAL,
Petitioners-Appellants,

Appeals from the United States District
Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division.

v.

Nos. 16 C 6441, 16 C 6442 & 16 C 5104

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Respondent-Appellee.

Amy J. St. Eve,
Judge.

ORDER

In 2010 Joshua Vidal, Juan Velez, and Juan DeJesus tried to rob cocaine from what they thought was a stash house. They were charged with conspiring and attempting to possess with intent to distribute more than five kilograms of cocaine, see 18 U.S.C. § 2; 21 U.S.C. §§ 841(a)(1), 846; attempting Hobbs Act robbery, see 18 U.S.C. §§ 2, 1951(a); and one count per defendant of possessing a firearm in furtherance of these crimes, see 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(1)(A). Vidal pleaded guilty to all the charges, while Velez and DeJesus pleaded guilty only to the attempted robbery and the firearm offense.

After the Supreme Court's decision in Johnson v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2551 (2015), which held that the residual clause of 18 U.S.C. § 924(e) is unconstitutionally vague, all three defendants filed collateral attacks under 28 U.S.C. § 2255. They contended their firearm convictions under § 924(c) were unsound because attempted Hobbs Act robbery qualifies as a predicate "crime of violence" only under that statute's residual clause, which mirrors the unduly vague clause in Johnson. Accord United States v. Davis, 139 S. Ct. 2319 (2019) (later extending Johnson to invalidate as unduly vague § 924(c)'s residual clause). But the district court denied the motions on the ground that, even if § 924(c)'s residual clause is unconstitutionally vague, attempted Hobbs Act robbery qualifies as a "crime of violence" under the statute's elements clause, see 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(A), which suffers from no vagueness problem.

The defendants timely appealed, and this court consolidated the cases. Velez and DeJesus filed a joint brief challenging the merits of the district court's decision. Meanwhile, Vidal's counsel filed a motion invoking Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738 (1967), asserting that Vidal's appeal was frivolous. This court observed that under Lavin v. Rednour, 641 F.3d 830 (7th Cir. 2011), instead of an Anders-style motion Vidal's attorney should have filed a motion to vacate the certificate of appealability. Nonetheless the court decided to construe counsel's filing as a Lavin motion and take it with the cases. The court further allowed Vidal an opportunity to respond, which he did. Vidal also moved this court to appoint new counsel, another motion taken with the cases.

On appeal Velez and DeJesus contend attempted Hobbs Act robbery is not a crime of violence under § 924(c); Vidal's pro se response brief makes essentially the same argument. But their position is foreclosed by this court's recent decision in United States v. Ingram, No. 19-1403 (7th Cir. Jan. 17, 2020). In that case, we held that attempted Hobbs Act robbery is a predicate "crime of violence" under § 924(c) based on our decisions in Hill v. United States, 877 F.3d 717, 719 (7th Cir. 2017), and United States v. D.D.B., 903 F.3d 684, 691–93 (7th Cir. 2018). Ingram's holding is consistent with the Eleventh Circuit's similar conclusion in United States v. St. Hubert—the only other appellate opinion we found that has ruled on this issue. 909 F.3d 335, 351–53 (11th Cir. 2018), cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 1394 (2019), abrogated in part on other grounds by Davis, 139 S. Ct. at 2336. We decline to reconsider a question we have decided so recently, nor have we been asked to here.

We therefore AFFIRM the district court's judgments with respect to Velez and DeJesus; GRANT counsel's motion to vacate Vidal's certificate of appealability; and DENY Vidal's motion to appoint new counsel because he has no non-frivolous argument to raise.