Gage Raley ("Movant") respectfully requests that this Court grant permission to file the accompanying amicus brief, which exceeds the type-volume limitations set forth in Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 29(d). In support of this Motion, Movant states as follows:

1. Fed. R. App. P. 29(d) states "[e]xcept by the court's permission, an amicus brief may be no more than one-half the maximum length authorized by these rules for a party's principal brief." Fed. R. App. P. 32(7)(B)(i) limits a principal brief to 14,000 words, and half of that total is 7,000.

2. Including headings, footnotes, and quotations, this brief contains 11,420 words, which is between the maximum length for a principal brief and the maximum length for an appellate brief.

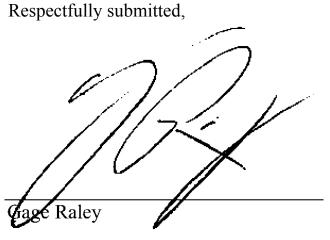

3. Movant respectfully submits that an exemption from the word limit is appropriate in this circumstance because the brief presents entirely original facts and arguments, and thus requires more elucidation than would the typical amicus curiae which merely supplements facts and arguments provided by a principal brief. An exemption is also warranted in this situation because this is an unusually complex case, as shown by the fact that the principal brief was 30,315 words long.

4. Furthermore, fundamental rights review under the Due Process Clauseis very evidence-intensive, requiring a court to delve deeply into historical records.This brief supplies important facts and historical sources that are not contained in either the trial record or the party briefs. An exemption from the type-volume limitation will allow this brief to include addition facts and authorities that will assist this Court in coming to an informed decision on the due process claim.

5. To date, Movant has used his best efforts to shorten the length of this brief, but believes that any further reductions would compromise the brief's analysis of the issues, and also deprive the Court of valuable facts and authorities.

WHEREFORE, Movant respectfully requests that this Court grant leave to file a amicus brief in excess of the 7,000 word limit provided by Rule 29(d).
