SUMMARY*

Class Action / Attorneys' Fees

The panel filed (1) an order denying a petition for panel rehearing, denying on behalf of the court a petition for rehearing en banc, and amending the opinion filed on July 5, 2022; and (2) an amended opinion reversing the district court's order certifying a class of 156 individuals who personally performed work for Field Asset Services, Inc. ("FAS"), reversing the partial summary judgment in favor of the class, vacating the interim award of more than five million dollars in attorneys' fees, and remanding for further proceedings.

FAS is in the business of pre-foreclosure property preservation for the residential mortgage industry. Plaintiff Fred Bowerman was the sole proprietor of BB Home Services, which contracted with FAS as a vendor. Bowerman alleged that FAS willfully misclassified him and members of the putative class as independent contractors, rather than employees, resulting in FAS's failure to pay overtime compensation and to indemnify them for their business expenses.

FAS first argued that the district court abused its discretion by certifying the class, despite the predominance of individualized questions over common ones. Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3), a district court must find that common questions of fact or law to class members predominate over individual members' questions before certifying a class. The panel held that here, the class failed the requirement because complex, individualized inquiries would be needed to establish that class members worked overtime or that claimed expenses were reimbursable. On this record, the individual inquiries clearly predominated over the common questions in the case, and the district court abused its discretion in holding otherwise. Any common question as to misclassification was outweighed by the individual questions going to injury and damages. The damages phase of this class action was far messier than promised by plaintiffs' counsels when the case was certified. The plaintiffs' evidence here was like that offered in Castillo v. Bank of America, N.A., 980 F.3d 723 (9th Cir. 2020), where the court affirmed the district court's denial of class certification. The panel concluded that class certification was improper.

Second, FAS argued that S.G. Borello & Sons, Inc. v. Department of Industrial Relations, 769 P.2d 399 (Cal. 1989) ("Borello"), not Dynamex Operations West, Inc. v. Superior Court, 416 P.3d 1 (Cal. 2018) ("Dynamex"), applied to all the class members' claims. The panel held that the California Court of Appeal has repeatedly limited Dynamex's applications to claims based on or "rooted in" California's wage orders. Here, the class members' expense reimbursement claims were not based on a California wage order, but on Cal. Labor Code § 2802. Nor were they “rooted in” a California wage order, even though the class members belatedly invoked Wage Order 16-2001 in their class certification briefing. The panel rejected FAS’s contention that Borello governed because the overtime claims were “joint employment” claims to which Dynamex did not apply. The panel held that Dynamex applied to Bowerman’s overtime claims. The panel noted that FAS’s joint employment argument would likely succeed were an actual employee of a vendor suing FAS, claiming that FAS was an employer. On remand, the district court may consider the joint employment issue in the first instance for class members who own or operate LLCs or corporations, which are distinct legal entities.

Third, FAS contended that the district court erred by granting summary judgment under Borello’s multifactor and fact-intensive inquiry because, among other reasons, FAS did not control the manner and means of the class members’ work. The panel first considered the expense reimbursement claims. The panel held that Borello governed the class members’ reimbursement claims. Under Borello, the existence of an employment relationship is a question for the trier of fact, and the district court erred in finding no triable issue of material fact.

Next, the panel considered the overtime claims. Dynamex adopted the “ABC test” to determine employee status for purposes of wage and hour claims like the class members’ overtime claims. The ABC test presumptively considers all workers to be employees, and permits workers to be classified as independent contractors only if the hiring business shows that the worker in question satisfies each of three conditions – A, B, and C. The panel held that summary judgment would not be proper under parts

A or C of the test because there were genuine disputes of material fact – whether the vendors were free from FAS’s control, and whether the vendors were engaged in an independently established trade, occupation, or business. The panel further held that summary judgment would be proper under part B of the test, which requires that the worker perform work that is outside the usual course of the hiring entity’s business, but FAS failed to satisfy part B. The facts supported the conclusion that the vendors performed services for FAS in the usual course of FAS’s business. This alone was dispositive of Bowerman’s employee status under Dynamex. In addition to Dynamex considerations, since the district court’s summary judgment decision, Cal. Labor Code § 2776 enacted a retroactive business-to-business exception to the ABC test, which provides that Dynamex does not apply to a bona fide business-to-business contracting relationship if a business service provider contracts to provide services to another such business. In this case, the determination of employee/independent contractor status of the business provider is governed by Borello if the contracting business demonstrates that twelve criteria are satisfied. Viewing these criteria, the panel held that there was a genuine dispute of material fact as to whether the exception applied to FAS and its vendors. The panel concluded that because of the enactment of section 2776, summary judgment was no longer warranted on the class’s overtime claims, even though summary judgment would be proper on those claims under Dynamex for sole proprietors like Bowerman.

The panel also held that there was a genuine dispute of material fact as to whether the class members ever incurred reimbursable expenses or ever worked overtime. Summary judgment was improper because a putative employer cannot be liable to an entire class of putative employees for failing to reimburse their business expenses and pay them overtime – unless the putative employer in fact failed to do so for each of them.

Fourth, FAS argued that the district court abused its discretion by awarding attorneys’ fees. The attorneys’ fee award on appeal was an interim award. The panel held that this case presented “extraordinary circumstances” that justified the exercise of pendent appellate jurisdiction over the interim fee award. The panel joined a majority of sister circuits, and held as a matter of first impression, that it could, and would, here, exercise pendent appellate jurisdiction over interim fee awards that are inextricably intertwined with or necessary to ensure meaningful review of final orders on appeal. The panel further held that the interim award of attorneys’ fees must be vacated because the class certification and summary judgment orders were issued in error.

ORDER

The opinion filed July 5, 2022, and appearing at 39 F.4th 652, is amended by the opinion filed concurrently with this order.

With these amendments, the panel unanimously votes to deny the petition for panel rehearing. Judges Bennett and Bade vote to deny the petition for rehearing en banc, and Judge W. Fletcher so recommends. The full court has been advised of the petition for rehearing en banc, and no judge requested a vote on whether to rehear the matter en banc. Fed. R. App. P. 35.

The petition for panel rehearing and rehearing en banc, filed August 8, 2022, is DENIED. No further petitions for panel rehearing or rehearing en banc will be entertained.

OPINION

BENNETT, Circuit Judge:

Defendant-Appellant Field Asset Services, Inc. (“FAS”)¹ appeals the certification of a class of 156 individuals who personally performed work for FAS, the Plaintiffs-Appellees. It also appeals the final judgment for eleven class members under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(b), after the district court granted partial summary judgment to all the class members as to liability. Finally, FAS appeals the accompanying interim award of more than five million dollars in attorneys' fees. We have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291 and reverse and remand on all three issues.

I. FACTS AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

A. FAS's Business Model

FAS is in the business of pre-foreclosure property preservation for the residential mortgage industry. But FAS, itself, does not perform pre-foreclosure property-preservation services for its clients. Rather, it contracts with vendors who perform those services. Some vendors are sole proprietorships; others are corporations. Vendors have varying numbers of employees, from at most a few to up to sixty-five. Some work almost exclusively for FAS; others perform work for multiple companies, including FAS's clients and competitors.

FAS exercises some control over the vendors' completion of their work. It requires that jobs be completed within seventy-two hours; provides detailed instructions for particular tasks; and imposes insurance, photo documentation, pricing, and invoicing requirements through its Vendor Qualification Packets ("VQPs") and work orders. It offers training, although the parties dispute whether the training is mandatory. And FAS monitors the vendors' job performance through vendor scorecards and Approved Vendor Quality Policies ("AVQPs"), which implement a discipline scale for vendor noncompliance with FAS's or FAS's clients' instructions. FAS classifies all its vendors as independent contractors.

B. The Initiation of the Lawsuit and Class Certification

Named Plaintiffs Fred and Julia Bowerman² sued in 2013, seeking damages and injunctive relief. Fred Bowerman was the sole proprietor of BB Home Services, which contracted with FAS as a vendor. The operative complaint alleged that FAS willfully misclassified Bowerman and members of the putative class as independent contractors rather than employees, resulting in FAS's failure to pay overtime compensation and to indemnify them for their business expenses.

The complaint also sought class certification under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(3), which the district court granted for a class defined as:

All persons who at any time from January 7, 2009 up to and through the time of judgment (the "Class Period") (1) were designated by FAS as independent contractors; (2) personally performed property preservation work in California pursuant to FAS work orders; and (3) while working for FAS during the Class Period, did not work for any other entity more than 30 percent of the time. The class excludes persons who primarily performed rehabilitation or remodel work for FAS.

The parties later agreed to fix the class period as beginning on January 7, 2009, and ending on December 20, 2016. FAS argued that the proposed class failed Rule 23(b)(3)'s predominance requirement because of the need for individualized damages hearings if liability were found. The district court rejected this argument, quoting our decision in Leyva v. Medline Industries Inc., 716 F.3d 510 (9th Cir. 2013), for the proposition that “[t]he presence of individualized damages cannot, by itself, defeat class certification under Rule 23(b)(3).” Id. at 514.

C. Summary Judgment

In March 2017, the district court granted partial summary judgment in favor of the class members, finding that they had been misclassified as independent contractors and that as a result, FAS was liable to them for failing to pay overtime and business expenses. In making that determination, the district court relied on California’s common law test for distinguishing between employees and independent contractors, as outlined in S.G. Borello & Sons, Inc. v. Department of Industrial Relations, 769 P.2d 399 (Cal. 1989). Under Borello, “the principal test of an employment relationship is whether the person to whom service is rendered has the right to control the manner and means of accomplishing the result desired.” Id. at 404 (citation and alteration omitted). But even though “the right to control work details is the ‘most important’ or ‘most significant’ consideration, . . . several ‘secondary’ indicia of the nature of a service relationship” also bear on the employee and independent contractor distinction. Id. For example, Borello noted that “strong evidence in support of an employment relationship is the right to discharge at will, without cause.” Id. (citation and alteration omitted). It also listed the following as secondary indicia of an employment versus independent contractor relationship:

- (a) whether the one performing services is engaged in a distinct occupation or business;
- (b) the kind of occupation, with reference to whether, in the locality, the work is usually done under the direction of the principal or by a specialist without supervision;
- (c) the skill required in the particular occupation;
- (d) whether the principal or the worker supplies the instrumentalities, tools, and the place of work for the person doing the work;
- (e) the length of time for which the services are to be performed;
- (f) the method of payment, whether by the time or by the job;
- (g) whether or not the work is a part of the regular business of the principal; and
- (h) whether or not the parties believe they are creating the relationship of employer-employee.

Id. Borello explained that “[g]enerally, the individual factors cannot be applied mechanically as separate tests; they are intertwined and their weight depends often on particular combinations.” Id. (citation and alteration omitted).

Applying this test, the district court granted partial summary judgment on the misclassification issue because it was “convinced that the overwhelming evidence on the most important factor of the [Borello] test”—that is, control—“tip[ped] the scales clearly in favor of finding an employee relationship.” In particular, the district court found that “[n]o reasonable juror could review the Vendor Packets, the work orders, the trainings, the Vendor Profiles, the discipline, and the Vendor scorecards, and conclude [that] any of the Vendors are independent contractors.”

Despite its conviction that the control factor supported the class, the district court’s analysis of Borello’s secondary factors was materially different. The district court stated that if it “ignored the right to control analysis, and focused solely on the secondary factors, [it] would not grant summary judgment.” In fact, the district court found that many of the secondary factors indicated independent contractor status, including the parties’ intent to create an independent contractor relationship, the class members’ opportunity for profit or loss, and the class members’ employment of assistants. Several of the other secondary factors implicated genuine disputes of material fact.³

But the district court found that FAS’s “right to control swamp[ed] [the secondary] factors in importance, and [some] secondary factors favor[ed] plaintiffs’ argument that [they] are employees.” Thus, the district court granted partial summary judgment to the class on the misclassification issue. The district court also granted partial summary judgment to the class on their overtime and expense reimbursement claims, which were derivative of the misclassification claim. In doing so, the district court relegated the issues of “whether a particular [class member] worked overtime on a specific day” (or ever), and “whether a specific expense” (or any) “was reasonable and necessary” to the damages phase of the trial, rather than the liability phase.

D. The Bellwether Jury Trial

In July 2017, the district court held a bellwether jury trial to determine damages for Named Plaintiff Fred Bowerman and ten of the 156 class members.⁴ The trial lasted eight days, as the class members’ damages were neither evident from any records detailing their overtime hours and reimbursable expenses, nor calculable by any common method. After the bellwether trial, FAS filed a second motion for class decertification, which the district court construed as a motion for leave to file a motion for reconsideration. Although the district court denied the motion, it acknowledged the difficulty of calculating every class member’s damages on an individualized basis with no method for doing so other than the class members’ individualized testimony, noting that “[t]he damages phase

⁴ After trial, FAS renewed its motion for judgment as a matter of law, arguing that the verdict as to five of the eleven claimants in their personal capacity was improper because “any expenses incurred in connection with the businesses of [those] Five Claimants were incurred by the corporate form, and not incurred personally by the claimant.” The district court correctly denied the motion. Under California law, a plaintiff can incur expenses even without ultimately paying them. See, e.g., Cochran v. Schwan’s Home Serv., Inc., 176 Cal. Rptr. 3d 407, 412–13 (Ct. App. 2014) (“If an employee is required to make work-related calls on a personal cell phone, then he or she is incurring an expense for purposes of [California Labor Code §] 2802. It does not matter whether the phone bill is paid for by a third person, or at all.”).

of this class action [will be] far messier than promised by plaintiffs' counsel when" the case was certified.⁵

E. Appeal and Stay of Proceedings After the California Supreme Court's Decision in Dynamex

Between the district court's summary judgment decision and FAS's first notice of appeal in July 2018, the California Supreme Court decided Dynamex Operations West, Inc. v. Superior Court, 416 P.3d 1 (Cal. 2018), which established a different test for distinguishing between employees and independent contractors in certain contexts, commonly known as "the ABC test." Id. at 34. Unlike the Borello test, "[t]he ABC test presumptively considers all workers to be employees, and permits workers to be classified as independent contractors only if the hiring business demonstrates that the worker in question satisfies each of three conditions":

- a) that the worker is free from the control and direction of the hirer in connection with the performance of the work, both under the contract for the performance of the work and in fact; and
- b) that the worker performs work that is outside the usual course of the hiring entity's business; and

⁵ As noted above, the judgment as to the bellwether trial was certified under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(b). The district court was referencing the difficulties in the bellwether trial that would also be present (although obviously on a much greater scale) in the damages phase of the trial for the remaining class members.

- c) that the worker is customarily engaged in an independently established trade, occupation, or business of the same nature as that involved in the work performed.

Id. We certified the issue of Dynamex's retroactivity to the California Supreme Court in Vazquez v. Jan-Pro Franchising International, Inc., 939 F.3d 1045 (9th Cir. 2019), and held FAS's appeal in abeyance. The California Supreme Court held that Dynamex does apply retroactively, Vazquez v. Jan-Pro Franchising Int'l, Inc., 478 P.3d 1207, 1208 (Cal. 2021), and we affirmed that applying Dynamex retroactively comports with due process, Vazquez v. Jan-Pro Franchising Int'l, Inc., 986 F.3d 1106, 1117–18 (9th Cir. 2021).

F. The Interim Award of Attorneys' Fees

In July 2018, class counsel moved in the district court for an award of attorneys' fees and related expenses, with no notice to the class members. In September 2018, the district court issued an interim order stating that the record was "not sufficient to tell whether all of the time plaintiffs [sought] to have compensated for 32 time-billers was reasonably incurred." Accordingly, the district court ordered an in-camera inspection of class counsel's contemporaneous time records. Although FAS sought access to those records, the district court never allowed that access.

In November 2018, the district court issued an interim fee award of $5,173,539.50. It did not "summarize the facts or posture of the case, except to say that it include[d] novel issues that the Ninth Circuit [would] address and that it was aggressively defended."

The district court thus began by awarding the lead counsel $3,381,540, which it justified with the following brief explanation:

The hourly rates they seek . . . are well within the reasonable range. The amount of time they billed in each of the categories is also reasonable, as lead counsel in small firms must not only coordinate all of the work in the case to ensure it is geared to effective advocacy at trial but must also bear the laboring oar on many aspects of the litigation.

The district court then awarded non-lead counsel $1,792,138.50 (they sought $1,991,265). It justified that decision with another brief explanation:

The contemporaneous records of plaintiffs' counsel show that the 28 timekeepers were performing substantive work with a minimum of overlap. However, it is inherently inefficient to have so many people working on a legal project. With such a large group, it is inevitable that information needs to be shared, common issues discussed, and overlapping tasks performed. I will reduce the sum requested for the 28 timekeepers, $1,991,265, by 10% for that inefficiency. See Moreno v. City of Sacramento, 534 F.3d 1106, 1112 (9th Cir. 2008) (“[T]he district court can impose a small reduction, no greater than 10 percent—a ‘haircut’—based on its exercise of discretion and without a more specific explanation.”).

The district court reserved decision on whether to apply a multiplier.

II. STANDARDS OF REVIEW

We review the class certification for an abuse of discretion, In re Wells Fargo Home Mortg. Overtime Pay Litig., 571 F.3d 953, 957 (9th Cir. 2009); the grant of summary judgment de novo, Narayan v. EGL, Inc., 616 F.3d 895, 899 (9th Cir. 2010); and the award of attorneys' fees for an abuse of discretion, In re Mercury Interactive Corp. Sec. Litig., 618 F.3d 988, 992 (9th Cir. 2010).

III. DISCUSSION

FAS makes four arguments on appeal. It first maintains that the district court abused its discretion by certifying the class, despite the predominance of individualized questions over common ones. Second, FAS argues that Borello, not Dynamex, applies to all the class members' claims, because Dynamex does not apply to joint employment claims, or to claims that are not based on or rooted in one of California's wage orders. Third, it contends that the district court erred by granting summary judgment under Borello's multifactor and fact-intensive inquiry, because, among other reasons, FAS does not control the manner and means of the class members' work. And fourth, FAS argues that the district court abused its discretion by awarding interim attorneys' fees without giving FAS access to the time records on which the award was based, without notifying class members of class counsel's fee motion, without finding the facts specially, and without providing a precise but clear explanation of its reasons for the award.⁶ We address each argument in turn.

A. Class Certification

Under the predominance requirement of Rule 23(b)(3), a district court must find that “questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members” before certifying a class. Here, the class fails that requirement because complex, individualized inquiries would be needed to establish that class members worked overtime or that claimed expenses were reimbursable. On this record, those individual inquiries clearly predominate over the common questions in the case, and the district court abused its discretion in holding otherwise.

We need not decide whether common evidence can prove that FAS has a uniform policy of misclassifying its vendors, because any common question as to misclassification is outweighed by the individual questions going to injury and damages. Of course, as we have emphasized, “the presence of individualized damages cannot, by itself, defeat class certification.” Leyva, 716 F.3d at 514; see also Lambert v. Nutraceutical Corp., 870 F.3d 1170, 1182 (9th Cir. 2017), rev’d on other grounds, 139 S. Ct. 710 (2019); Yokoyama v. Midland Nat’l Life Ins. Co., 594 F.3d 1087, 1094 (9th Cir. 2010). Rule 23(b)(3)

“requires only that the district court determine after rigorous analysis whether the common question predominates over any individual questions, including individualized questions about injury or entitlement to damages.” Olean Wholesale Grocery Coop., Inc. v. Bumble Bee Foods LLC, 31 F.4th 651, 669 (9th Cir. 2022) (en banc). Thus, “a district court is not precluded from certifying a class even if plaintiffs may have to prove individualized damages at trial, a conclusion implicitly based on the determination that such individualized issues do not predominate over common ones.” Id.

Still, class certification is inappropriate when “individualized questions . . . will overwhelm common ones.” Id. (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). When the district court initially held that predominance was satisfied and class certification was appropriate, it understood that individualized injury and damages assessments would not be prohibitively cumbersome. But the plaintiffs withdrew their expert after the district court “raised questions about the reliability of his data and opinions concerning an aggregate damages model.” Lacking any sort of representative evidence, the class members were left relying on individual testimony to establish the existence of an injury and the amount of damages.⁷ Such an approach would not necessarily have doomed class certification—so long as common questions continued to predominate. They did not.

As the district court recognized in its most recent order denying FAS’s motion for class decertification, “[t]he damages phase of this class action is far messier than promised by plaintiffs’ counsel when” the case was certified. The district court explained, “[b]ecause the documentary evidence maintained by the vendors . . . [is] scant at best, . . . [p]roof by the testimony of [individual] vendors is necessary.”

And the individualized testimony was not a simple matter. Plaintiffs do not dispute FAS’s assertions that “[a]ll who testified [during the bellwether jury trial] relied on their unaided memories as the primary or sole evidence of their work schedules,” and that “[n]one offered time-entry data or other contemporaneous records of hours worked,” as confirmed by the trial record. This has resulted in a series of mini-trials concerning the work history and credibility of each individual class member; already, it has taken eight days to determine damages for only eleven of the 156 class members. The “individualized mini-trials” required to establish liability and damages plainly distinguish this case expenses if any are owed does not amount to evidence that FAS had a uniform policy that required the class to work overtime or incur reimbursable expenses. See Sotelo v. MediaNews Grp., Inc., 143 Cal. Rptr. 3d 293, 305 (Ct. App. 2012) (explaining that a class may establish liability by proving that an alleged employer has “a uniform policy that requires putative class members to work overtime” (emphasis added)). We therefore accept FAS’s representation as true. Smith v. Marsh, 194 F.3d 1045, 1052 (9th Cir. 1999) (“[O]n appeal, arguments not raised by a party in its opening brief are deemed waived.”).

from Olean, where the proposal for calculating damages for each class member—though individualized—was “straightforward.” 31 F.4th at 682 n.31.

Nor does this case resemble Tyson Foods, Inc. v. Bouaphakeo, 577 U.S. 442 (2016). There, the defendant-employer argued that class certification was improper because the “necessarily person-specific inquiries into individual work time predominate[d] over the common questions.” Id. at 454. The Supreme Court rejected this argument because the plaintiffs had offered common evidence—in the form of a “representative sample”—that “each class member could have relied on” as evidence of the hours that he or she worked “if he or she had brought an individual action.” Id. at 455. The class members here argue they have common evidence too, pointing to FAS’s contracts requiring workers to incur all business expenses and disclaim any right to overtime pay. But unlike the representative evidence in Tyson Foods—which would have been sufficient, on its own, to establish the employer’s liability to each employee at trial, id. at 459—the common evidence here speaks only to some elements of the class members’ claims: namely, whether they were misclassified as independent contractors. It does not bear on whether the class members actually worked overtime or incurred reimbursable business expenses. It therefore carries less weight in the predominance inquiry than the representative evidence in Tyson Foods and the common issue it helps resolve is outweighed by the complexity of the individualized inquiries that remain.

The balance between common and individualized questions in this case is also unlike the wage-and-hour class actions in which our court has held that class certification is appropriate, in both the lack of representative evidence going to liability and the complexity of the remaining individualized questions. For example, in Ridgeway v. Walmart Inc., 946 F.3d 1066 (9th Cir. 2020), the plaintiffs presented common evidence that Wal-Mart was liable to all class members for failing to pay truck drivers for time spent on layovers, rest breaks, and inspections. Id. at 1086. The plaintiffs also offered common evidence in support of damages, in the form of representative sampling compiled by an expert and testimony from representative employees. Id. at 1087–89. In Senne v. Kansas City Royals Baseball Corp., 934 F.3d 918 (9th Cir. 2019), too, the plaintiffs offered representative evidence (in the form of an expert survey, team schedules, payroll data, and testimony from the employer and representative class members) in support of liability and damages. Id. at 925. This representative evidence tipped the scales in favor of common issues predominating, even though the damages calculations would involve some individualized inquiries. Id. at 943.

The plaintiffs’ evidence here is more like that offered in Castillo v. Bank of America, NA, 980 F.3d 723 (9th Cir. 2020), in which we affirmed the district court’s denial of class certification. Id. at 726–27. There, the plaintiffs offered common evidence showing that the defendant-employer utilized two unlawful overtime formulas in some circumstances. Id. at 727. Nevertheless, the common issues about the lawfulness of those formulas were outweighed by “complicated” individualized questions about “who was ever exposed to one or both policies, and whether those who were exposed were harmed in a way giving rise to liability.” Id. at 733.

In light of the complexity of the individualized questions and the absence of any representative evidence introduced to fill the class members’ evidentiary gap, the individual issues predominate over the common questions in this case. Class certification was therefore improper.⁸

B. The Proper Employment Test

1. Expense Reimbursement Claims

“Dynamex did not purport to replace the Borello standard in every instance where a worker must be classified as either an independent contractor or an employee for purposes of enforcing California’s labor protections.” Cal. Trucking Ass’n v. Su, 903 F.3d 953, 959 n.4 (9th Cir. 2018). Rather, Dynamex was clear that it “address[ed] only” the issue of how to distinguish between employees and independent contractors “with regard to those claims that derive directly from the obligations imposed by [a] wage order.” 416 P.3d at 25. Dynamex further suggested that its holding should not extend beyond that context, by describing the ABC test as a “distinct standard that provides broader coverage of workers with regard to the very fundamental protections afforded by wage and hour laws and wage orders,” given “the [Industrial Welfare Commission’s] determination that it is appropriate to apply a distinct and particularly expansive definition of employment regarding obligations imposed by a wage order.”⁹ Id. at 29 (emphases added).

The California Supreme Court’s subsequent decision in Vazquez v. Jan-Pro Franchising International, Inc., 478 P.3d 1207, affirmed that “[i]n Dynamex, [the] court was faced with a question of first impression: What standard applies under California law in determining whether workers should be classified as employees or independent contractors for purposes of the obligations imposed by California’s

⁹ The California Supreme Court elaborated that its holding “[found] its justification in the fundamental purposes and necessity of the minimum wage and maximum hour legislation in which the standard has traditionally been embodied”:

Wage and hour statutes and wage orders were adopted in recognition of the fact that individual workers generally possess less bargaining power than a hiring business and that workers’ fundamental need to earn income for their families’ survival may lead them to accept work for substandard wages or working conditions. The basic objective of wage and hour legislation and wage orders is to ensure that such workers are provided at least the minimal wages and working conditions that are necessary to enable them to obtain a subsistence standard of living and to protect the workers’ health and welfare. These critically important objectives support a very broad definition of the workers who fall within the reach of the wage orders.

Dynamex, 416 P.3d at 31–32 (citations omitted).

wage orders?” Id. at 1208 (emphasis added). It also held that Dynamex “did not change a settled rule” like the Borello test, as applied outside the wage order context. Id. at 1209. Consistent with that guidance, the California Court of Appeal has repeatedly limited Dynamex’s application to claims based on or “rooted in” California’s wage orders.¹⁰ See Vendor Surveillance Corp. v. Henning, 276 Cal. Rptr. 3d 458, 468–69 (Ct. App. 2021); Gonzales v. San Gabriel Transit, Inc., 253 Cal. Rptr. 3d 681, 701–04 (Ct. App. 2019); Garcia v. Border Transp. Grp., LLC, 239 Cal. Rptr. 3d 360, 370–71 (Ct. App. 2018).

Here, the class members’ expense reimbursement claims are not based on a California wage order, but on California Labor Code § 2802.¹¹ Nor are they “rooted in” a California wage order, even though the class members belatedly invoked Wage Order 16-2001 in their class certification briefing. Wage Order 16-2001 does not “cover[] most of the [section 2802] violations alleged,” and its provisions are not “equivalent or overlapping” with section 2802. Gonzales,

253 Cal. Rptr. 3d at 702, 704. Although section 2802 covers “all necessary expenditures or losses incurred by the employee in direct consequence of the discharge of his or her duties,” Cal. Lab. Code § 2802(a), Wage Order 16-2001 covers only “tools or equipment,” Cal. Code Regs. tit. 8, § 11160. Indeed, many expenses for which class members sought and recovered reimbursement at trial, including insurance, cellphone charges, dump fees, and mileage/fuel, are covered only by section 2802—not by Wage Order 16-2001’s “tools and equipment” provision. Thus, Borello, not Dynamex, applies to the expense reimbursement claims.

2. Overtime Claims

Neither party disputes that the class members’ overtime claims are based on California’s wage orders. Still, FAS insists that Borello governs, because FAS believes the overtime claims are “joint employment” claims to which Dynamex does not apply.

FAS is correct that Dynamex does not apply to joint employment claims. The California Supreme Court created Dynamex’s ABC test to address “concerns . . . regarding the disadvantages . . . inherent in relying upon a multifactor, all the circumstances standard for distinguishing between employees and independent contractors.” 416 P.3d at 35. Those concerns include (1) “that a multifactor, ‘all the circumstances’ standard makes it difficult for both hiring businesses and workers to determine in advance how a particular category of workers will be classified, frequently leaving the ultimate employee or independent contractor determination to a subsequent and often considerably delayed judicial decision”; and (2) that it “affords a hiring business greater opportunity to evade its fundamental responsibilities under a wage and hour law by dividing its workforce into disparate categories and varying the working conditions of individual workers within such categories with an eye to the many circumstances that may be relevant.” Id. at 33–34.

Because these “reasons for selecting the ‘ABC’ test are uniquely relevant to the issue of allegedly misclassified independent contractors,” the ABC test does not extend to the joint employment context, where those concerns are no longer present. Curry v. Equilon Enters., LLC, 233 Cal. Rptr. 3d 295, 313–14 (Ct. App. 2018). Indeed, “[i]n the joint employment context, the alleged employee is already considered an employee of the primary employer,” who “is presumably paying taxes.” Id. at 313. Furthermore, “the employee is afforded legal protections due to being an employee of the primary employer.” Id. As a result, the policy purpose behind Dynamex’s ABC test, i.e., “the policy purpose for presuming the worker to be an employee and requiring the secondary employer to disprove the worker’s status as an employee[,] is unnecessary” in joint employment cases, “in that taxes are being paid and the worker has employment protections.” Id. at 313–14; see also Henderson v. Equilon Enters., LLC, 253 Cal. Rptr. 3d 738, 753–54 (Ct. App. 2019) (holding that the ABC test also does not apply to joint employment claims because “parts B and C of the ABC test do not fit analytically with such claims,” id. at 753).

But Bowerman’s claims (and those of other sole proprietors) are not joint employment claims—they are employee misclassification claims, like those in Dynamex. FAS argues that the class members are “employees of their [own] self-owned businesses.” Dynamex’s policy concerns are equally applicable for sole proprietors like Bowerman because they have no putative employer other than FAS to pay their taxes or afford them legal protections under the California wage orders. See Ball v. Steadfast-BLK, 126 Cal. Rptr. 3d 743, 747 (Ct. App. 2011) (“[A] sole proprietorship is not a legal entity separate from its individual owner.”). So Dynamex applies to Bowerman’s overtime claims.

But FAS’s joint employment argument would likely succeed were an actual employee of a vendor suing FAS, claiming that FAS was an employer. Notably, Plaintiffs-Appellees’ counsel conceded at oral argument that at least some of the class members are employed by entities other than FAS.¹² Thus, some of the class members’ theories of liability could depend on their ability to establish that FAS was a joint employer. On remand, the district court may consider the joint employment issue in the first instance for class members who own or operate LLCs or corporations, which are distinct legal entities.¹³ See Nw. Energetic Servs., LLC v. Cal. Franchise Tax Bd., 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 642, 649 (Ct. App. 2008) (LLCs); Merco Constr. Eng’rs, Inc. v. Municipal Court, 581 P.2d 636, 639 (Cal. 1978) (corporations).

C. Summary Judgment

1. Expense Reimbursement Claims

As explained above, Borello governs the class members’ expense reimbursement claims. Under Borello, “[t]he existence of an employment relationship is a question for the trier of fact.” Angelotti v. Walt Disney Co., 121 Cal. Rptr. 3d 863, 870 (Ct. App. 2011). The existence of such a relationship “can be decided by the court as a matter of law if the evidence supports only one reasonable conclusion.” Id. (emphases added). Such is not the case here. “At its heart, this case involves competing, if not necessarily conflicting, evidence that must be weighed by a trier of fact.” Arzate v. Bridge Terminal Transp., Inc., 121 Cal. Rptr. 3d 400, 405 (Ct. App. 2011). Thus, “the trial court erred in finding no triable issue of material fact.” Id.

¹² This concession is perplexing given that class members, by definition, cannot “work for any other entity more than 30 percent of the time.” But we credit it, nonetheless.

“As the parties and trial court correctly recognized, control over how a result is achieved lies at the heart of the common law test for employment.” Ayala v. Antelope Valley Newspapers, Inc., 327 P.3d 165, 172 (Cal. 2014) (emphasis added). The district court granted summary judgment because it was “convinced that the overwhelming evidence” of FAS’s control “tip[ped] the scales clearly in favor of finding an employee relationship.” Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to FAS, that conclusion was incorrect.

California law is clear that “[i]f control may be exercised only as to the result of the work and not the means by which it is accomplished, an independent contractor relationship is established.” Millsap v. Fed. Express Corp., 277 Cal. Rptr. 807, 811 (Ct. App. 1991) (citation omitted). Whether a hiring entity’s control is results-oriented or means-oriented depends on how the factfinder, or the court on summary judgment, defines “results.” For instance, in Alexander v. FedEx Ground Package System, Inc., 765 F.3d 981 (9th Cir. 2014), we determined that “‘results,’ reasonably understood, refer[red] in [the] context [of package delivery services] to [the] timely and professional delivery of packages.” Id. at

990. Thus, we rejected FedEx’s argument that it was controlling only the results of its drivers’ work by mandating a particular dress code from the drivers’ “hats down to their shoes and socks”; by requiring them “to paint their vehicles a specific shade of white, [to] mark them with the distinctive FedEx logo, and to keep their vehicles ‘clean and presentable [and] free of body damage and extraneous markings’”; and by dictating “the vehicles’ dimensions, including the dimensions of their ‘package shelves’ and the materials from which the shelves [were] made.” Id. at 989 (second alteration in original). We held that “no reasonable jury could find that the ‘results’ sought by FedEx include[d]” such detailed requirements, which bore no logical relation to the “timely and professional delivery of packages.” Id. at 990.

In contrast, whether FAS’s control over the class members’ work is means- or results-oriented should have been left to the jury. When viewed in the light most favorable to FAS, the instructions in FAS’s VQPs and work orders—though detailed—are geared toward the satisfactory completion of the class members’ job assignments. The same can be said for the training the class members received on following those instructions, the vendor scorecards that monitored whether they followed the instructions, and the AVQPs that disciplined those who did not.

The VQPs uniformly characterize the parties’ relationship as vendor-vendee, not employer-employee. In fact, several VQPs explicitly designate or refer to the vendors as independent contractors. Consistent with that designation, the VQPs do not control whether a vendor accepts a particular job, who does the work on the vendor’s behalf, when the work gets done, or on what terms. Rather, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to FAS, the class members are free to decline FAS work orders, or to negotiate the terms of their acceptance. And if they do accept a work order, they are free to hire any employee or subcontractor who can pass a background screening to perform the work, and they are free to design their own schedule for completing the assignment within FAS's seventy-two-hour deadline. Although such a short deadline creates a tight turnaround, we reject the district court's conclusion that this turnaround renders "FAS's argument that it does not control when vendors perform work disingenuous" and "inconsequential." Requiring a worker to complete a task within a desired timeframe is a quintessential example of controlling the result of that worker's job performance.

As for the VQPs' detailed instructions for particular job assignments, FAS raises a genuine dispute of material fact as to whether they control the results, and not the manner and means, of the class members' work on those assignments. For example, one VQP's instructions for "Flooring" require vendors to "replace doorstops and install shoe molding" for vinyl flooring; "replace [the] pad" for carpet; "remove and replace [the tiles], add floor leveler, thin set[,] and grout" for ceramic tile; and "add floor float and install shoe mold" for laminate/wood floors. The same VQP's instructions for "Drywall/Paint/Wallpaper" require vendors to "match [the] existing finish," "re-textur[e] the walls," and use paint that is "a neutral color and of medium grade or better." And the VQP's instructions for "Roofing" require that the new roof "not overlay [the] existing roof" and that it "[b]e consistent with neighborhood/ . . . HOA/ . . . local requirements."

Unlike the requirements in Alexander as to the drivers' and their vehicles' appearance, these instructions are directed toward the desired results of the vendors' work, at least when read in the light most favorable to FAS. Indeed, the right to control results is a "broad" one, encompassing "the right to inspect, the right to make suggestions or recommendations as to details of the work, [and] the right to prescribe alterations or deviations in the work," none of which "chang[e] the relationship from that of owner and independent contractor." Beaumont-Jacques v. Farmers Grp., Inc., 159 Cal. Rptr. 3d 102, 106 (Ct. App. 2013) (citations omitted). Thus, the district court erred by concluding that "[n]o reasonable juror could review the Vendor Packets, the work orders, the trainings, the Vendor Profiles, the discipline, and the Vendor scorecards, and conclude any of the Vendors are independent contractors."¹⁴

Turning, then, to the secondary factors, many tip in favor of independent contractor status, including the parties' intent to create an independent contractor relationship, the class members' opportunity for profit or loss, and the class members' employment of assistants. The district court correctly found for FAS on all of these, and the class members dispute only the weight—not the merits—of those findings on appeal. Several of the other secondary factors were, and continue to be, subject to genuine dispute, including the exclusivity of the class members’ relationship with FAS, whether their businesses are distinct from FAS’s business, and whether FAS supplied their tools, instrumentalities, and place of work. Finally, the district court erred by finding that the VQPs contain at-will termination provisions, which are “strong evidence of a right to control.” Many VQPs contain no termination provision, and the VQPs cited by the district court include a mutual termination provision, which “may properly be included in an independent contractor agreement, and is not by itself a basis for changing that relationship to one of an employee.” Arnold v. Mut. of Omaha Ins. Co., 135 Cal. Rptr. 3d 213, 220 (Ct. App. 2011); see also Varisco v. Gateway Sci. & Eng’g, Inc., 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 393, 398–99 (Ct. App. 2008). Thus, the district court was right to conclude that the secondary factors do not establish that the class members are FAS’s employees as a matter of law, absent clear, uncontroverted evidence that FAS controls the manner and means of their work.

In short, the class members “exhibit[] classic evidence of both an independent contractor and employee” under the Borello test, which “evidence must be weighed by a trier of fact.” Jackson v. AEG Live, LLC, 183 Cal. Rptr. 3d 394, 416 (Ct. App. 2015). Thus, summary judgment on the class members' expense reimbursement claims was inappropriate.¹⁵

2. Overtime Claims

As explained above, Dynamex adopted the ABC test to determine employee status for purposes of wage and hour claims like the class members' overtime claims. "The ABC test presumptively considers all workers to be employees, and permits workers to be classified as independent contractors only if the hiring business demonstrates that the worker in question satisfies each of three conditions":

- a) that the worker is free from the control and direction of the hirer in connection with the performance of the work, both under the contract for the performance of the work, and in fact; and
- b) that the worker performs work that is outside the usual course of the hiring entity's business; and
- c) that the worker is customarily engaged in an independently established trade, occupation, or business of the same nature as that involved in the work performed.

Dynamex, 416 P.3d at 34.

¹⁵ We do not foreclose summary judgment in favor of an individual class member (or FAS as to an individual class member), as the facts as to every class member are not before us.

Here, summary judgment would not be proper under parts A or C of the test. Our discussion of Borello already explained that genuine disputes of material fact underlie the questions of (A) whether the vendors were free from FAS's control, and (C) whether the vendors were engaged in an independently established trade, occupation, or business. But summary judgment would be proper under part B of the test. Though FAS proclaimed itself the "premier Property Preservation, [Real Estate Owned Property] Maintenance, and Repair Services company," it still contends that its vendors—those who perform those premier property preservation, maintenance, and repair services—perform work that is outside the usual course of FAS's business. Stating the proposition is alone enough to show its fatal shortcomings.

Still, FAS insists that it satisfies part B because it "does not itself perform preservation services," but "coordinates the completion of preservation services, an activity distinctly different from the business of property preservation." But FAS's own advertisements belie this contention:

FAS offers a full range of professional services for our clients, with the goal of reducing the time and costs involved in recovering and maintaining properties. Using a single point of contact, our clients can engage us for a variety of needs inside and outside the property. These include, but are not limited to, the following examples of residential real estate services: property re-key, secure openings, debris removal, repairs, eviction lockouts, personal property removal, smoke detector installs, retrofit services, lawn maintenance, janitorial service, winterization, pool maintenance, rehabilitation/construction & repairs, [and] emergency maintenance[.]

FAS's position has also been rejected by several courts considering analogous arguments by rideshare companies that they "are in the business solely of creating technological platforms, not of transporting passengers"—including the California Court of Appeal in People v. Uber Technologies, Inc., 270 Cal. Rptr. 3d 290, 311 (Ct. App. 2020). See also id. at 311–14 (collecting cases). In doing so, the California Court of Appeal considered that ridesharing companies market themselves as on-demand ride services, actively seek out customers for those services, make money only if those services are provided, monitor the quality of the services, and discipline drivers who deliver deficient services. Id. at 311–14. FAS markets itself as providing comprehensive property preservation services, advertises to clients needing such services, makes money only if those services are provided, monitors the quality of those services through vendor scorecards, and disciplines its vendors for deficient services through AVQPs. As in Uber Technologies, "[t]hese facts amply support the conclusion that" the vendors "perform services for [FAS] in the usual course of [FAS's] business[.]" Id. at 313–14.

FAS resists this conclusion by analogizing to Curry v. Equilon Enterprises, LLC, 233 Cal. Rptr. 3d 295. The California Court of Appeal stated (in dicta) that under Dynamex, the managers of Shell stations were not the employees of Shell, which leased its service stations to third-party operators who in turn employed the managers. Id. at 314–15. The Court of Appeal accepted Shell's argument that it “was not in the business of operating fueling stations—it was in the business of owning real estate and fuel”—and thus concluded that “there [was] not a triable issue of fact as to the ‘B’ factor because managing a fuel station was not the type of business in which Shell was engaged.” Id. at 314.

The court in Uber Technologies found Curry “readily distinguishable,” contrasting the “situation in which a putative joint employer leases facilities to a worker’s direct employer and has no involvement in the worker’s employment or compensation” with the situation in which a putative employer’s “usual course of business involves the day-to-day task of matching riders and drivers each time a user requests a ride, arranging for riders’ payments to be processed, and retaining a portion of the proceeds from each ride.” Uber Techs., 270 Cal. Rptr. 3d at 315. Like Uber Technologies, this is not a joint employment case but a misclassification case regarding sole proprietors like Bowerman, and the putative employer’s business centers on the services the plaintiffs provide. Thus, the reasoning of Uber Technologies applies and dictates that Bowerman performed work well within the usual course of FAS’s business under part B of the ABC test, which is alone dispositive of his employee status under Dynamex. See 416 P.3d at 34.

But Dynamex is not the only new development in California employment law since the district court’s summary judgment decision. California Labor Code § 2776 recently enacted a retroactive business-to-business exception to the ABC test. See Cal. Lab. Code § 2785(b). Under that exception, “the holding in Dynamex do[es] not apply to a bona fide business-to-business contracting relationship . . . [i]f an individual acting as a sole proprietor, or a business entity formed as a partnership, limited liability company, limited liability partnership, or corporation ('business service provider') contracts to provide services to another such business." Id. § 2776(a). Instead, "the determination of employee or independent contractor status of the business services provider shall be governed by Borello, if the contracting business demonstrates that [each of twelve] criteria [is] satisfied."¹⁶ Id.

¹⁶ The twelve criteria are as follows:

- 1) The business service provider is free from the control and direction of the contracting business entity in connection with the performance of the work, both under the contract for the performance of the work and in fact.
- 2) The business service provider is providing services directly to the contracting business rather than to customers of the contracting business. This subparagraph does not apply if the business service provider's employees are solely performing the services under the contract under the name of the business service provider and the business service provider regularly contracts with other businesses.
- 3) The contract with the business service provider is in writing and specifies the payment amount, including any applicable rate of pay, for services to be performed, as well as the due date of payment for such services.
- 4) If the work is performed in a jurisdiction that requires the business service provider to have a business license or business tax registration, the business service provider has the required business license or business tax registration.

- 5) The business service provider maintains a business location, which may include the business service provider's residence, that is separate from the business or work location of the contracting business.
- 6) The business service provider is customarily engaged in an independently established business of the same nature as that involved in the work performed.
- 7) The business service provider can contract with other businesses to provide the same or similar services and maintain a clientele without restrictions from the hiring entity.
- 8) The business service provider advertises and holds itself out to the public as available to provide the same or similar services.
- 9) Consistent with the nature of the work, the business service provider provides its own tools, vehicles, and equipment to perform the services, not including any proprietary materials that may be necessary to perform the services under the contract.
- 10) The business service provider can negotiate its own rates.
- 11) Consistent with the nature of the work, the business service provider can set its own hours and location of work.
- 12) The business service provider is not performing the type of work for which a license from the Contractors' State License Board is required, pursuant to Chapter 9 (commencing with Section

Viewing those criteria, there is a genuine dispute of fact as to whether the exception applies to FAS and its vendors. For example, one criterion is that “[t]he business service provider [be] free from the control and direction of the contracting business entity in connection with the performance of the work, both under the contract for the performance of the work and in fact.” Id. § 2776(a)(1). Another is that “[t]he business service provider [be] customarily engaged in an independently established business of the same nature as that involved in the work performed.” Id. § 2776(a)(6). As already explained at length, FAS’s control of its vendors, as well as the independence of the vendors’ businesses from FAS’s business, are genuinely disputed factual issues.¹⁷ Thus, because of the enactment of section 2776, summary judgment is no longer warranted on the class’s overtime claims, even though summary judgment would be proper on those claims under Dynamex for sole proprietors like Bowerman.

3. All Claims

We hold above that there is a genuine dispute of material fact as to whether the class members are employees or 7000) of Division 3 of the Business and Professions Code.

Cal. Lab. Code § 2776(a).

¹⁷ We reject plaintiffs’ request that we rule, on appeal, that FAS, as a matter of law, cannot invoke the business-to-business exception as to any class member. We do not foreclose the district court from determining, on remand, that FAS may not rely on the business-to-business exception as to a particular class member, should the undisputed evidence as to that class member so warrant.

independent contractors—under Borello for the expense reimbursement claims and under the business-to-business exception for the overtime claims. But there is also a genuine dispute of material fact as to whether the class members ever incurred reimbursable expenses or ever worked overtime. Thus, summary judgment was also improper for the very same reason that the class certification was: a putative employer cannot be liable to an entire class of putative employees for failing to reimburse their business expenses and pay them overtime unless the putative employer in fact failed to do so for each of them.

D. Attorneys' Fees

Under 28 U.S.C. § 1291, we have jurisdiction over final district court decisions. The attorneys' fee award on appeal is an interim award. It “does not dispose of the underlying litigation” and “does not even dispose of the issue of attorney's fees,” given that the district court reserved its decision on whether to apply a multiplier. Rosenfeld v. United States, 859 F.2d 717, 720 (9th Cir. 1988). Thus, we consider the order nonfinal for purposes of § 1291. See id.; Hillery v. Rushen, 702 F.2d 848, 848–49 (9th Cir. 1983) (same); cf. Gates v. Rowland, 39 F.3d 1439, 1450 (9th Cir. 1994) (treating an interim fee award as final when it “follow[ed] a final judgment on the merits” and “dispose[d] of the issue of attorneys' fees”); Finnegan v. Dir., Off. of Workers' Comp. Programs, 69 F.3d 1039, 1040–41 (9th Cir. 1995) (same).

Nevertheless, we hold that this case presents “extraordinary circumstances” justifying our exercise of pendent appellate jurisdiction over the interim fee award. McCarter v. Ret. Plan for the Dist. Managers of the Am. Fam. Ins. Grp., 540 F.3d 649, 653 (7th Cir. 2008). We have the power to exercise pendent jurisdiction over claims “raised in conjunction with other issues properly before the court . . . if the rulings [are] inextricably intertwined or if review of the pendent issue [is] necessary to ensure meaningful review of the independently reviewable issue.” United States v. Tillman, 756 F.3d 1144, 1149 (9th Cir. 2014) (internal quotation marks omitted). That requirement is satisfied here because FAS’s primary argument for vacating the interim fee award is that the district court erred by certifying the class and granting summary judgment to the plaintiffs—issues that are not just “inextricably intertwined” with FAS’s appeal of the class certification and summary judgment orders; they are identical.

The plaintiffs argue that most courts “have found that interim fee awards are not immediately appealable under the doctrine of pendent jurisdiction,” but that can be an oversimplification. In truth, most of the courts to have confronted the issue in this case—whether to exercise pendent appellate jurisdiction over an interim order that is inextricably intertwined with an independently appealable order—have concluded that the order is immediately appealable under the doctrine of pendent jurisdiction, consistent with the Supreme Court’s holding in Swint v. Chambers County Commission, 514 U.S. 35 (1995). See id. at 51 (implying that appellate courts should not exercise pendent jurisdiction to review claims that are not “inextricably intertwined with” or “necessary to ensure meaningful review of” the final order on appeal); see also, e.g., Thornton v. Gen. Motors Corp., 136 F.3d 450, 454 (5th Cir. 1998) (per curiam); Sabal Trail Transmission, LLC v. 3.921 Acres of Land in Lake Cnty. Fla., 947 F.3d 1362, 1372 (11th Cir. 2020); Gilda Marx, Inc. v. Wildwood Exercise, Inc., 85 F.3d 675, 678–79 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (per curiam). But see Home Builders Ass'n of Greater St. Louis v. L & L Exhibition Mgmt., Inc., 226 F.3d 944, 951 (8th Cir. 2000). Today we join the majority of our sister circuits, and hold as a matter of first impression, see Knupfer v. Lindblade (In re Dyer), 322 F.3d 1178, 1187–88 (9th Cir. 2003), that we can—and here, will—exercise pendent appellate jurisdiction over interim fee orders that are inextricably intertwined with or necessary to ensure meaningful review of final orders on appeal.

The interim award of attorneys' fees must be vacated because the class certification and summary judgment orders were issued in error. See Hopkins v. City of Sierra Vista, 931 F.2d 524, 529 (9th Cir. 1991) (“Because we reverse and remand for further proceedings on the merits, there is no prevailing party and we must also reverse the district court’s award of attorneys’ fees.”).

IV. CONCLUSION

Under the right circumstances, class certification and summary judgment are useful mechanisms for the speedy resolution of claims. But those circumstances are not present here. We therefore REVERSE the class certification order, REVERSE the summary judgment order, VACATE the interim award of attorneys' fees, and REMAND to the district court for proceedings consistent with this opinion, with costs awarded to FAS.
