9 J.P. Morgan Securities LLC,

10 Plaintiff,

11 v.

12 Henry J. Krich,

13 Defendant.
14

No. CV-15-00979-PHX-DGC

TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER

15
16 On June 4, 2015, the Court held a hearing on Plaintiff's motion for a temporary 17 restraining order ("TRO"). Doc. 1. After considering the evidence submitted by the 18 parties and their written and oral arguments, the Court will grant the motion.

19 I. Background.

20 On May 1, 2015, Defendant Henry Krich resigned from his position as a Private 21 Client Advisor for Plaintiff JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. and JPMorgan Securities, LCC
22 (collectively "JPMS") in order to begin working for Wells Fargo Advisors, LCC. Doc. 1, 23 ¶ 2. Krich worked for JPMS as a Financial Advisor from 2002-2007, as an Independent 24 Financial Advisor from 2007-2012, and most recently as a Private Client Advisor. Id.,
25 ¶ 36. His position required him to work closely with clients to create a customized, 26 comprehensive investment program. Id., ¶ 37. At the time he resigned, Krich was 27 managing approximately $96 million in assets spread across 470 accounts. Id., ¶ 38.
28 JPMS maintains that Krich did not independently develop most of this business, but was

1 instead referred to existing customers for investment advice. Id., ¶¶ 39-40. When Krich
2 was hired, he had 20 preexisting clients. Id., ¶ 42.

3 In 2002, as a condition of his employment, Krich signed a Confidentiality and 4 Non-Solicitation Agreement (the “Agreement”) in which he agreed not to use
5 confidential information obtained during his employment and to refrain from soliciting
6 JPMS’s clients for 12 months after termination of his employment. Id., ¶¶ 3, 22. The 7 Agreement requires Krich to protect the confidentiality of JPMS’s trade secrets and 8 confidential information, which includes names, addresses, and telephone numbers of 9 customers and prospective customers; account information; specific customer needs;
10 information regarding established business relationships; software; and any other 11 information JPMS deemed confidential. Id., ¶ 23. Krich also agreed to comply with 12 JPMS’s Code of Conduct, which prohibits employees from soliciting JPMS customers
13 after termination of their employment. Id., ¶ 20.

14 On May 29, 2015, JPMS filed this action alleging that Krich “improperly utilized 15 confidential client information to solicit both clients he developed while at [JPMS] as 16 well as other JPMS clients.” Id., ¶ 48. The complaint asserts that “multiple JPMS clients 17 have advised JPMS that they have been solicited by Krich and wish to remain clients of 18 JPMS,” and that Wells Fargo has been assisting Krich’s solicitation. Id., ¶¶ 48, 49. The 19 complaint asserts eight causes of action: (1) Breach of Contract – the Confidentiality and 20 Non-Solicitation Agreement, (2) Misappropriation of Trade Secrets, (3) Breach of 21 Fiduciary Duty, (4) Tortious Interference with Business Relationships, (5) Unjust
22 Enrichment, (6) Unfair Competition, (7) Replevin, and (8) Conversion. JPMS seeks a 23 TRO to preserve the status quo pending arbitration of its claims before the Financial 24 Industry Regulatory Authority (“FINRA”).

25 II. Legal Standard.

26 A TRO is “an extraordinary and drastic remedy, one that should not be granted 27 unless the movant, by a clear showing, carries the burden of persuasion.” Mazurek v.
28 Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972 (1997) (emphasis in original). A TRO may be granted if

1 the movant “establishes that he is likely to succeed on the merits, that he is likely to 2 suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of equities
3 tips in his favor, and that an injunction is in the public interest.” Winter v. Natural Res.
4 Defense Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20 (2008). Where, as here, the party requests a TRO
5 pending arbitration, a district court may “issue interim injunctive relief on arbitrable 6 claims if interim relief is necessary to preserve the status quo and the meaningfulness of 7 the arbitration process – provided, of course, that the requirements for granting injunction
8 relief are otherwise satisfied.” Toyo Tire Holdings of Am. v. Continental Tire N.A., Inc., 9 609 F.3d 975, 981 (9th Cir. 2010).

10 III. Analysis.

11 JPMS asks the Court to prohibit Krich from using confidential customer 12 information gained during his employment to solicit customers “whom he became aware 13 of or with whom he had direct contact while an employee of [JPMS].” Doc. 3 at 8.

14 A. Likelihood of Success on the Merits.

15 In order to demonstrate a likelihood of success on the merits, JPMS must show
16 that the Agreement is enforceable and that Krich has violated it by using JPMS’s
17 confidential information or by soliciting its clients.¹

18 1. Enforceability of the Agreement.

19 “The validity of a restrictive covenant is determined by its reasonableness.”
20 Phoenix Orthopedic Surgeons, Ltd. v. Peairs, 790 P.2d 752, 758 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1989).
21 A restrictive covenant is reasonable and therefore enforceable by injunction where (1) the 22 restraint does not exceed that necessary to protect the employer’s legitimate interest,
23 (2) the restraint would not cause undue hardship to the employee, and (3) the restraint
24 would not cause harm to the public interest. See id. at 757; Valley Med. Specialists v.
25 Farber, 982 P.2d 1277, 1283 (Ariz. 1999) (en banc).

26
27 ¹ The Agreement is governed by New York law (Doc. 1-1 at 20), but both parties 28 cite Arizona case law and statutes in support of their arguments. Because the parties have not identified any meaningful differences between Arizona and New York law regarding restrictive covenants, the Court will look to familiar Arizona cases.

1 Other than the restriction on advertisements and announcements discussed below,
2 Krich does not argue that the restrictive covenant at issue in this case is unenforceable.
3 See Doc. 9 at 8. Nor would he be likely to succeed in such an argument. The primary
4 covenant Krich signed is an “anti-piracy agreement,” which “restricts the terminated
5 employee from soliciting customers of his former employer or making use of confidential
6 information from his previous employment.” Hilb, Rogal & Hamilton Co. of Arizona v.
7 McKinney, 946 P.2d 464, 467 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1997). “Because it is less restrictive on the 8 employee (and thus on free market forces) than a covenant not to compete, an anti-piracy 9 agreement ordinarily is not deemed unreasonable or oppressive.” Id.

10 Employers have “a protectable interest in maintaining customer relationships 11 when an employee leaves.” Bryceland v. Northey, 772 P.2d 36, 40 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1989).
12 JPMS certainly has an interest in protecting confidential client information and 13 established clientele. See Farber, 982 P.2d at 1284 (noting that an employer’s clientele is 14 “an asset of value which has been acquired by virtue of effort and expenditures over a 15 period of time, and which should be protected as a form of property”). In addition, the 16 covenant’s 12-month duration is likely reasonable. See Compass Bank v. Hartley, 430 F.
17 Supp. 2d 973, 981 (D. Ariz. 2006) (finding one year duration of covenant not to compete 18 reasonable where employee left employer to start own firm).

19 Krich argues that the Agreement is overbroad because it prohibits him from 20 sending out “any advertisement or announcement” of his new employment to clients he 21 serviced. Doc. 9 at 8; Doc. 1-1, ¶ 8(f). He claims that Arizona law permits such 22 announcements if they do not include a solicitation. See Alpha Tax Services v. Stuart, 23 761 P.2d 1073, 1075 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1988). Krich is correct. The court in Alpha Tax 24 held that “[m]erely informing customers of one’s former employer of a change of 25 employment, without more, is not solicitation.” Id. The Court agrees that the ban on 26 advertisements and announcements in paragraph 8(f) is likely overly broad under Arizona
27 law, but Arizona cases permit courts to strike out unenforceable provisions if they are 28 grammatically severable from other portions of the contract. Farber, 982 P.2d at 1286.

1 The Court finds paragraph 8(f) of the Agreement to be grammatically severable,
2 concludes that it can be eliminated under Arizona law, and finds that the remainder of the 3 restrictive covenant is likely enforceable.²

4 2. Whether Krich Violated the Agreement.

5 At the TRO hearing, JPMS called Krich’s former supervisor at JPMS, Harman
6 Johal, as a witness. Johal testified that he met with Krich upon his resignation and 7 reminded him of the restrictive covenant in the Agreement. Johal then assigned three 8 JPMS employees to contact Krich’s JPMS clients and inform them that they would be 9 serviced by new JPMS financial advisors in light of Krich’s departure. Upon making the 10 contact, these employees were informed by many of the clients that they had already been 11 contacted by Krich. Some had appointments to meet with him at Wells Fargo.³

12 Krich has presented no evidence to contradict Johal’s testimony. Although he 13 provided a declaration in response to the TRO application, it is very narrow. Quoting 14 assertions in a JPMS declaration, Krich states only that “I did not ‘improperly utilize 15 confidential client information to solicit clients [I] developed while at JPMS.’” Doc. 9-1.
16 Krich does not state that he has refrained from contacting his former clients, only that he 17 has not “improperly” done so. And when offered the opportunity to continue the TRO
18 hearing so he could present evidence in response to Johal’s testimony, Krich declined.

19 The Court concludes that JPMS is likely to succeed on the merits. The evidence 20 suggests that Krich has violated an enforceable restrictive covenant prohibiting him from 21 contacting JPMS clients for a period of 12 months.

22
23 ² The Court notes that although advertisements and announcements are permitted 24 under Arizona law, cases have held that including contact information in a directly-mailed announcement transforms it into a solicitation. Hartley, 430 F. Supp. 2d at 981.

25 ³ Defendant objected at the TRO hearing that Johal’s testimony about comments
26 by JPMS clients was hearsay. But “[d]ue to the urgency of obtaining a preliminary 27 injunction at a point when there has been limited factual development, the rules of 28 evidence do not apply strictly to preliminary injunction proceedings.” Herb Reed Enter., LLC v. Florida Entm’t Mgmt., Inc., 736 F.3d 1239, 1250 n.5 (9th Cir. 2013); see also Republic of the Philippines v. Marcos, 862 F.2d 1355, 1363 (9th Cir. 1988) (“It was within the discretion of the district court to accept . . . hearsay for purposes of deciding whether to issue the preliminary injunction.”). This principle applies with equal force to TRO hearings.

1 Krich also argues that JPMS may be a signatory to an industry Protocol that allows 2 financial advisors to take clients with them when they move to other investment firms.
3 Doc. 9-1 at 9. But the letter provided by Krich suggests that the JPMS participation in 4 the Protocol may be limited to former Bear Sterns employees (Krich is not one), and 5 Johal testified that he had no knowledge that the Protocol applied to his office or Krich.
6 Moreover, JPMS notes that Krich did not take the steps required by the Protocol when he 7 left JPMS. The Court is not persuaded that the Protocol will prevent JPMS from 8 succeeding on the merits of its claim.

9 B. Irreparable Harm.

10 Courts are split on whether an investment firm can show irreparable harm from the 11 loss of investment clients to a former employee. Many courts have held that the losses 12 resulting from such harm are difficult to quantify, particularly when, as here, the firm has 13 invested considerable effort in cultivating and growing the goodwill and business of the 14 clients. See, e.g., Thrivent Fin. for Lutherans v. Hutchinson, 906 F. Supp. 2d 897, 907
15 (D. Neb. 2012) (“the amount of damages resulting from the solicitation of Thrivent’s
16 clients and use of its Confidential Business information would be difficult, if not 17 impossible, to ascertain with any degree of certainty.”); Fid. Brokerage Servs. LLC v.
18 Clemens, No. 2:13-CV-239, 2013 WL 5936671, at *10 (E.D. Tenn. Nov. 4, 2013)
19 (“While the Court agrees that the loss of fees earned from the customers who transfer 20 their accounts can ultimately be calculated and compensated as money damages if 21 Fidelity prevails on the merits, it does appear to the Court that certain elements of 22 Fidelity’s claimed damages in the form of loss of customer referrals and loss of goodwill 23 are very difficult to calculate, or even adequately prove.”); Hilliard v. Clark, No. 1:07-24 CV-811, 2007 WL 2589956, at *9 (W.D. Mich. Aug. 31, 2007) (“there was no way to 25 calculate how much the various client portfolios might have grown if they were not 26 transferred, what assets the clients may have earned, inherited or won over time, or what 27 potential referrals transferring clients might have made.”); but see Morgan Stanley v.
28 Frisby, 163 F. Supp. 2d 1371, 1376 (N.D. Ga. 2001) (investment advisor industry is

1 heavily regulated, transactions are monitored electronically, every trade is recorded, and 2 any loss to the former firm is easily calculable).

3 The Court finds the first category of cases more persuasive. It would likely be 4 impossible to determine accurately how much future business JPMS would lose through 5 the loss of Krich's clients. Moreover, Krich himself acknowledged in the Agreement that 6 that JPMS would suffer irreparable harm from his solicitation of former clients. Doc. 1-1
7 at 19. The Court concludes that JPMS has shown a likelihood of irreparable harm.⁴

8 C. Other Requirements.

9 Several facts suggest that the equities tip in favor of JPMS: Krich knowingly 10 signed the Agreement, Krich was reminded of it when he resigned, Krich does not 11 dispute that the vast majority of his clients came from JPMS banking and other 12 relationships, and Krich appears to have been violating the Agreement and contacting his 13 former clients. The Court also concludes that enforcement of the Agreement is in the 14 public interest. The Agreement is reasonable in scope as applied in this order, exists only 15 for 12 months, and does not prevent Krich from working in his chosen profession.

16 D. Bond.

17 Rule 65(c) requires that JPMS provide security in an amount the Court deems 18 proper. Given the short duration of TROs, the Court concludes that $25,000 is sufficient.
19 JPMS will be required to post security in this amount within 48 hours of entry of the 20 TRO.

21 IT IS ORDERED:

- 22 1. JPMS's motion for a TRO (Doc. 1) is granted.
- 23 2. For the duration of this TRO, Defendant Henry J. Krich is enjoined from 24 doing any of the following:
- 25 a. Soliciting or initiating contact with any JPMS clients (other than those

26
27 ⁴ The Court asked the parties at the TRO hearing whether FINRA procedures 28 provide an adequate remedy at law for JPMS to obtain immediate injunctive relief. After the hearing, the Court reviewed the FINRA rules and learned that they contemplate judicial entry of a TRO to protect parties from immediate injury. See FINRA Rule 13804.

listed in Attachment A to the Agreement (Doc. 1-1 at 23)) who were serviced by Krich while he was employed at JPMS or whose names became known to Krich by virtue of his employment at JPMS. This shall include Krich's meeting with JPMS clients as a result of his previous solicitation or initiation of contact with them. This TRO does not prevent Krich or his new employer from issuing generally-disseminated advertisements or announcements of his new employment.

- b. Using or divulging JPMS's Confidential Information (as defined in paragraph 7 of the Agreement (Doc. 1-1 at 18)).
