INTERNAL AFFAIRS

PLAYBOY.COM POSES QUESTIONS TO THE INFAMOUS WASHINGTON, D.C. SEX BLOGGER. AND THEN SHE POSES NUDE.

Last spring, an aide for Ohio Senator Mike DeWine published a steamy blog about her Beltway sexcapades. She said her Internet diary was for the amusement of her girlfriends. It began on May 5 with the posting, "I have a 'glamour job' on the Hill. That is, I could not care less about gov or politics, but working for a Senator looks good on my resume. And these marble hallways are such great places for meeting boys and showing off my outfits."

Over the next two weeks, boy-crazy Jessica Cutler explicitly detailed her affairs with six men, including a Georgetown lawyer who paid her for sex and a staffer in Sen. Joe Lieberman's office, where she had previously interned. But the real mystery beau who had Washington tongues wagging was an unnamed married man, a Chief of Staff at a government agency appointed by President Bush. Cutler claimed he paid her up to $400 for sex. When the blog was made public on May 18, her 26th birthday, Cutler became the blab of the Beltway. She lost her $28,000 a-year job, and the former intern was dubbed the "New-inski" by the press.

Since then, Cutler has kept the identity of her Bush-appointed benefactor secret and parlayed her notoriety into a nude Playboy pictorial and a reported six-figure book deal from Hyperion. Her novel The Washingtonienne, named for her infamous blog, comes out next year, but you can see her nude photos right now in the Playboy Cyber Club. In this exclusive Playboy.com interview, the brown-eyed, 5'2", Korean-American dynamo dishes about her wild way and means in Washington.

KAC SAYS:

'Cutler is obviously not a D.C. Socialite. That chick stood in line for 1.5 hours to get into Saki, for the love of God. We could teach her a few things.'

Playboy.com: Didn't you learn anything about discretion from Monica Lewinski talking to Linda Tripp?

Jessica Cutler: No, because you never think that's going to happen to you. I wasn't doing anything that extraordinary. I was dating around. There's nothing that crazy about it.

Playboy.com: All these guys.... Are you sexually insatiable?

Jessica Cutler: I wouldn't say sexually insatiable, because sometimes I don't feel like doing it. When you meet a guy, you want to know right away what he's good at. When you talk to your girlfriends, they want to know, "Did you do it? How big is it? Did he go down on you? Is he good at that?" Women only have a certain amount of time. You want to know right away, before you waste any time.

Playboy.com: Are you affiliated with a political party?

Jessica Cutler: I'm registered as a Republican. That doesn't mean much, though. I'm from New York. New York's different. I'm more the Giuliani/Pataki style Republican, which basically means you're against crime. I'm not, you know, "conservative."

Playboy.com: Will you ever name the Bush appointee you referred to as "F" in "The Washingtonienne"?

Jessica Cutler: I am not ever going to name him.

Playboy.com: Ever? Even Woodward and Bernstein promised to name Deep Throat after he or she dies.

Jessica Cutler: Yeah, but even that would be giving away the fact that they're still alive. [Laughs] I haven't even told my friends. None of these people were elected officials, so they don't deserve the scrutiny.

Playboy.com: Is it a name like Dick Cheney or someone at that level?

Jessica Cutler: Absolutely not. I think I would have tried to cash in on that earlier.

Playboy.com: How did "F" come to give you money in hotel rooms?

]

Jessica Cutler: He told me right up front, "I'm married. Don't think we're going to be going out to dinner together. We can't be seen together." It was consideration for that. When I met him I was still interning. He worried about me, that I wasn't able to make rent, so he asked me if there was anything I needed. That's how he brought it up.

Playboy.com: And the lawyer?

Jessica Cutler: He would give me cash and act like a big showoff. It's really obnoxious, but after a certain point you're just like, Fine, I'll take it. Why look a gift horse in the mouth? It's not that unusual. When I lived in New York there were guys doing this all the time. They don't even know you, and they offer to give you money or buy you things. I guess I look approachable. You get offered things. I would have to say, though, that 90 percent of the things that strange men have offered me I've said no to.

Playboy.com: Where's the craziest place you've ever had sex?

Jessica Cutler: On the Mall, but that was before 9/11 and all the security. A lot of people still get away with it. That was a popular thing to do.

Playboy.com: Are your sexploits representative of women of your generation?

Jessica Cutler: I don't think I'm unique. I'm young, I date around, I'm looking to have fun. I've been in serious monogamous relationships that could have led to marriage, but I've had to learn the hard way that I'm too young for that. It was never enough. Girls my age need to realize that love is not enough. It's very fleeting.

Playboy.com: Will The Washingtonienne be autobiographical?

Jessica Cutler: It's a novel. I don't want anybody to think it's autobiographical. But, of course you write from experience.

Playboy.com: What is the storyline?

Jessica Cutler: A girl leaves New York and moves to Washington and starts getting into trouble. The whole point of it is that this person, who is obviously based on myself, doesn't have anything extraordinary about her. Stuff just happens to her. Now that I'm writing it, I see that I go out a lot. I think if you go out a lot, things just tend to happen to you. Then again, it's a lifestyle in Washington. People go out a lot here. The odds of something crazy happening to you are very high when you're putting yourself out there.

Playboy.com: What would people be most surprised to know about life inside the Beltway?

Jessica Cutler: People like to pretend that money and looks don't matter, but they do. It's supposed to be a big meritocracy, but people here are just as shallow as anywhere else. The thing about D.C. is it's not Miami or New York where there are all these hot people everywhere. I'm cute by New York standards, but when I came here, my stock just shot up fast. Also, people who have so much to lose can't help themselves.

Playboy.com: What advice would you give to someone starting a blog?

Jessica Cutler: With a blog, you can't expect your private life to be private anymore. You just never know. But, when you work on the Hill you find out the guy you've been sleeping with has told everyone in your office about it. So, what's the difference? It's writing on the bathroom wall.

Playboy.com: Are your blog and your novel going to be the final nails in the coffin for attractive young women being interns in Washington? What father would send his little girl to Capitol Hill?

Jessica Cutler: I don't think so. It might encourage more men to come to Washington, and there's nothing wrong with that.
