I left you a voicemail this morning. We represent Hachette in this matter and would like an extension of time to respond to your complaint. In my voicemail, I asked for two weeks from when it is due, which is September 30, 2008.

I would like to file the motion this afternoon.

Thanks.

Subject: Extension

Please note that the Complaint in the Hachette case lists my phone and email contact. Please use those correct contacts. Given that you have had the complaint in this case for the last three months and the size of the law firm in which you work, I will consent to your enlargements as long as you will consent to the same for me for two times the time. So, by that measure, I will consent to the two-week extension that you seek as long as you consent to four-week extension for me to respond to any motion to dismiss that you may file.
