Plaintiff appeals a decision by Defendant Commissioner of Social Security (hereinafter the "Agency"), denying her claim for disability insurance benefits. Plaintiff claims that the administrative law judge ("ALJ") erred when he concluded that she did not have a severe mental impairment. She argues that the ALJ should have accepted an examining psychiatrist's opinion that her mental impairment was severe, instead of a non-examining psychiatrist's opinion that it was not severe. For the reasons set forth below, the Court concludes that the ALJ did not err in finding that Plaintiff's mental impairment was not severe.

1 Plaintiff was born in 1953 and was 52 years old when she 2 testified at the last administrative hearing in this case in March 3 2006. (Administrative Record ("AR") 72.) Plaintiff had worked for 20
4 years in a hospital as a psychiatric technician. (AR 336.) In 1998, 5 she stopped working due to physical injuries incurred on the job. (AR 6 608.) In February 1998, she applied for disability insurance 7 benefits, alleging that she became disabled in January 1998, due to 8 musculoskeletal injuries and stress. (AR 266.) Her claim was denied 9 initially and on reconsideration. She then requested and was granted 10 a hearing before an ALJ. In August 1999, her claim was denied by the 11 ALJ. (AR 266-72.) Plaintiff appealed, but the Appeals Council 12 affirmed the ALJ's decision in July 2000. (AR 281-82.) Plaintiff did 13 not appeal the Appeals Council's decision.

14 In March 2001, Plaintiff filed a new claim, again alleging 15 disability as of January 1998, due to musculoskeletal impairments.
16 (AR 334-43.) Her claim was denied initially and she requested and was 17 granted a hearing before an ALJ. (AR 602-21.) In July 2003, the ALJ 18 denied her claim. (AR 36-48.) In doing so, he determined, among 19 other things, that Plaintiff did not have a severe mental impairment, 20 relying on the opinions of examining psychiatrist Inderjit Seehrai and 21 reviewing psychiatrist Patrick Ryan. (AR 43-44.) Plaintiff appealed 22 to the Appeals Council, which denied review. (AR 8-10.) She then 23 appealed to this Court. In March 2005, the Court reversed the ALJ's 24 decision and remanded the case to the Agency with instructions to 25 reconsider the issue of Plaintiff's mental impairment in light of 26 examining psychiatrist Nader Oskooilar's opinion that Plaintiff had a 27 severe impairment, which the ALJ had failed to mention in his 28 decision. (AR 695-704.)

1 In March 2006, the ALJ held another hearing. (AR 725-37.) In 2 October 2006, he issued a decision, again denying Plaintiff's claim
3 for benefits. (AR 665-71.) This time, he did note that Dr. Oskooilar 4 had concluded that Plaintiff's psychiatric impairment would preclude 5 work, but he gave the opinion no weight because:

6 1. It was inconsistent with the Global Assessment of 7 Functioning ("GAF") score of 65-70 that Dr. Oskooilar
8 assigned to Plaintiff at the same time that he concluded 9 that Plaintiff had a "moderately significant" psychiatric 10 impairment;

11 2. It was contradicted by Dr. Abejuela's, Dr. Ryan's, and Dr.
12 Seehrai's opinions that Plaintiff did not have a severe 13 mental or psychiatric impairment; and 14 3. Plaintiff's treating doctor (an osteopath) reported not 15 having seen any signs or symptoms of a mental impairment and 16 had not referred Plaintiff for mental health treatment.

17 (AR 669-70.)

18 The ALJ concluded at step two that Plaintiff's mental impairment 19 was not severe. Plaintiff argues that this was error. As explained 20 below, Plaintiff's argument is rejected.

21 At step two of the sequential evaluation process, the ALJ is 22 tasked with determining which impairments are severe and which are not 23 severe. 20 C.F.R. § 404.1520(c). Severe impairments are impairments 24 that significantly limit a claimant's ability to perform basic work 25 activities. 20 C.F.R. § 404.1521(a). In the context of a psychiatric 26 impairment, like the one alleged herein, the basic work activities 27 that come into play are:

28

- 1 1. Understanding, carrying out, and remembering simple
- 2 instructions;
- 3 2. Use of judgment;
- 4 3. Responding appropriately to supervision, co-workers, and
- 5 usual worker situations; and
- 6 4. Dealing with changes in a routine work setting.

7 20 C.F.R. § 404.1521(b).

8 Step two is intended to be a de minimus screening test, used to 9 cull out groundless claims. See Smolen v. Chater, 80 F.3d 1273, 1290 10 (9th Cir. 1996).

11 There were four psychiatrists, one psychologist, and an osteopath 12 who provided input regarding Plaintiff's mental/psychological health 13 in this case. In April 1998, psychiatrist Reynaldo Abejuela examined 14 Plaintiff at the Agency's request in connection with Plaintiff's prior 15 application. (AR 224-28.) Dr. Abejuela concluded that Plaintiff 16 suffered from mild depression and anxiety. (AR 227.) He found that 17 she also had mild cognitive impairment, but no severe limitations due 18 to mental or emotional problems. (AR 227.)

19 In June 2001, the Agency sent Plaintiff to psychiatrist Nader
20 Oskooilar for a consultative examination. (AR 510-13.) Dr. Oskooilar 21 diagnosed Plaintiff with depressive disorder, not otherwise specified, 22 and schizo-type personality disorder features. (AR 512.) In Dr.
23 Oskooilar's view, Plaintiff had a moderately significant psychiatric 24 impairment which would interfere with her ability to work. (AR 512.)
25 At the same time, however, Dr. Oskooilar determined that Plaintiff's 26 GAF was 65-70, (AR 512), which suggested that her mental impairment

1 was not that severe and that it would not interfere with her ability
2 to work. See Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, 3 Fourth Ed. (2000) ("DSM-IV-TR") at 34.<sup>1</sup>

4 In June 2001, Plaintiff's osteopath, Dr. Philip Wunder, completed
5 a form that the Agency had sent him, which included seven questions 6 directed at whether he had witnessed any signs of mental illness while 7 treating Plaintiff over the previous three years. (AR 483-84.) Dr.
8 Wunder indicated that he had not seen any such signs and that he had 9 not referred her for mental health treatment. (AR 483-84.)

10 In August 2001, the Agency forwarded the medical records to 11 psychiatrist Patrick Ryan and asked him to review them and offer an 12 opinion as to Plaintiff's condition. (AR 539-52.) Dr. Ryan filled 13 out a check-the-box form, indicating that Plaintiff did not have a 14 severe psychiatric impairment. (AR 539-52.) The explanation he 15 offered for this opinion is cryptic, at best. (AR 551.) The Court 16 has labored to interpret his note as follows:

17 ALJ decision in 8/99 for non-severe [psychiatric 18 impairment]; no [psychiatric treatment] prior to start date 19 → [more] weight to 6/01 [psychiatric consultative

27 <sup>1</sup> A score of 61-70 denotes, "some mild symptoms ... but 28 generally functioning pretty well ...." DSM-IV-TR at 34.

1           rebutting the presumption of continuing non-disability per 2           the ALJ decision.<sup>2</sup>

3 (AR 551.)

4           In January 2002, the Agency sent Plaintiff to psychiatrist 5 Inderjit Seehrai. (AR 559-62.) He diagnosed Plaintiff with 6 depression and concluded that she "may" have moderate impairment in 7 completing a normal workday and workweek because of her depression.
8 (AR 562.) He also opined that she would have problems concentrating.
9 (AR 562.) He assigned Plaintiff a GAF score of 65. (AR 562.)

10           In September 2002, Plaintiff was referred by her treating doctor 11 to psychologist Philip Corrado to develop strategies for dealing with 12 pain. (AR 742-44.) Dr. Corrado noted that Plaintiff reported being 13 depressed, but he did not report any mental or psychiatric 14 impairments. (AR 743.)

15           Thus, the ALJ was faced with a confusing, conflicting record to 16 sort out to determine whether Plaintiff's mental impairment was 17 severe. One of the examining doctors believed Plaintiff's impairment 18 was not severe (Dr. Abejuela), one believed it was (Dr. Oskooilar), 19 and a third fell somewhere in the middle (Dr. Seehrai). The 20 consulting doctor (Dr. Ryan) clearly believed Plaintiff's impairment 21 was not severe.<sup>3</sup> The ALJ sided with the doctors who concluded that 22 Plaintiff's impairment was not severe. He based this decision on 23 valid reasons, which are supported by substantial evidence in the 24 record, i.e., Dr. Oskooilar's opinion was internally inconsistent and

26           <sup>2</sup> Brackets indicate interpretations by the Court of what it 27 believed Dr. Ryan's symbols and abbreviations were intended to mean.

28           <sup>3</sup> The psychologist (Dr. Corrado) and the osteopath (Dr. Wunder) did not technically offer opinions on Plaintiff's mental health.

1 was contradicted by the other doctors' opinions and Dr. Wunder did not 2 observe any signs of a mental impairment.<sup>4</sup> The ALJ was tasked with 3 resolving conflicts and ambiguities in the medical record, Andrews v.
4 Shalala, 53 F.3d 1035, 1039 (9th Cir. 1995), and the Court cannot say 5 that he erred here.

6 Plaintiff sees the evidence differently. First, it seems, he 7 believes that Dr. Abejeula's report should be ignored because it was 8 completed in 1998 and Plaintiff's amended alleged onset date was 9 August 1999. (Joint Stip. at 4.) There is no support in law or fact 10 for ignoring a medical opinion because it was completed before the 11 alleged onset date. Though Plaintiff might properly argue that less 12 weight should attach to the opinion, the ALJ was right when he took it 13 into account.

14 Next, Plaintiff has a different interpretation of Dr. Seehrai's 15 opinion than the Court and the ALJ. (Joint Stip. at 8.) In 16 Plaintiff's view, Dr. Seehrai determined that Plaintiff had a severe 17 impairment. (Joint Stip. at 8.) The Court does not read Dr.
18 Seehrai's opinion to say that. Though Dr. Seehrai concluded that 19 Plaintiff would have difficulty performing detailed and complex tasks 20 due to her mental impairments, he also found that she would not have 21 any problems performing simple and repetitive tasks. (AR 562.)
22 Further, Dr. Seehrai's opinion that Plaintiff "may" have difficulty 23 completing a workday or workweek because of her depression, 24 concentration problems, and sedative medication cannot be read to mean 25

26 <sup>4</sup> Because Dr. Oskooilar was not a treating physician, the ALJ 27 was not required to contact him to resolve the apparent ambiguity in 28 his report. See Thomas v. Barnhart, 278 F.3d 947, 958 (9th Cir.
2002).

1 that Plaintiff would have these problems, as Plaintiff seems to 2 suggest. (Joint Stip. at 10.) Finally, Plaintiff's interpretation
3 that Dr. Seehrai found that Plaintiff had a severe mental impairment 4 conflicts with Dr. Seehrai's finding that Plaintiff had a GAF score of 5 65.<sup>5</sup>

6 Plaintiff takes exception to the ALJ's reliance on Dr. Wunder's 7 observation that Plaintiff did not exhibit signs of any psychiatric 8 problems, arguing that Dr. Wunder was a treating osteopath, not a 9 treating psychiatrist. (Joint Stip. at 18-19.) Though the Court 10 would agree that Dr. Wunder's input did not rise to the level of a 11 treating opinion, it was proper for the ALJ to attach some weight to 12 the fact that Plaintiff never exhibited any signs of a mental 13 impairment when she was with him 19 times over the course of three 14 years.

15 In addition to the reasons set forth above, the Court's 16 conclusion that the ALJ did not err in finding that Plaintiff's mental 17 impairment was not severe is bolstered by additional evidence in the 18 record. First, Plaintiff never raised a mental impairment in her 19 application for benefits nor did she stop working because of a mental 20 impairment. (AR 334-56.) Second, the ALJ found that Plaintiff was 21 not credible, (AR 669-70), a finding Plaintiff does not challenge.
22 This is important because the doctors' opinions in this case were 23 based primarily on Plaintiff's allegations regarding her symptoms. If

25 <sup>5</sup> Plaintiff argues in her brief that the ALJ's analysis of the 26 GAF scores amounts to a medical conclusion, which, she contends, the 27 ALJ was not competent to make. (Joint Stip. at 20.) The Court does 28 not agree. The GAF score itself, i.e., the number, does not require any specialized training, it is what it is. The meaning of that score is set forth in the DSM-IV-TR in laymen's terms, which ALJs and others can read and understand.

1 the allegations cannot be believed, the doctors' opinions based on 2 those allegations are suspect. Third, Plaintiff essentially never 3 underwent any mental health treatment. She saw a psychiatrist twice, 4 once when she was getting divorced and once when she was being 5 harassed at work. (AR 510-13.) She also visited a psychologist one 6 time to help manage pain. (AR 742-44.) This lack of treatment
7 reinforces the ALJ's finding that Plaintiff, a psychiatric technician 8 by trade, did not suffer from a severe mental impairment.<sup>6</sup>

9 Though the Court might have concluded that Plaintiff's impairment 10 was severe had it been tasked with making that call at the 11 administrative level, the Court cannot substitute its judgment for the 12 ALJ's where, as here, the decision is supported by substantial 13 evidence. See Tackett v. Apfel, 180 F.3d 1094, 1097-98 (9th Cir.
14 1999). For all these reasons, the Agency's decision is affirmed and 15 the Complaint is dismissed with prejudice.

16 IT IS SO ORDERED.

17 DATED: September 23, 2008.

23 <sup>6</sup> Plaintiff testified at the administrative hearing in 2003 that 24 she had been receiving psychiatric care for nine months, and had 25 stopped because she ran out of money. (AR 617.) In the decision that 26 followed, the ALJ rejected this claim because Plaintiff had not 27 submitted any records to substantiate it. (AR 44.) Three years 28 later, and in the face of the ALJ's previous finding regarding the lack of evidence for this treatment, Plaintiff did not produce any evidence to show that she had received this treatment. The Court presumes that she never received psychiatric treatment and her testimony that she did was untrue.
