Here you go. It has the "good morning" lyrics and the "happy birthday" lyrics. Surely the copyright hasn't lasted this long.

The 1927 edition is in a storage facility off campus. I can ask them to send it to me and I can scan the pages, but it'll take a day or two for the book to get here. You might have the copy you ordered by then. We can race. I'll send you the scans a.s.a.p.

Linda, this was very helpful, but unfortunately the first edition of the book does not include the work we were looking for (but we needed to confirm whether it did). Would you mind asking the Associate Director of the Center for American Music to copy the page including Song # 16, which is entitled "Good Morning and Birthday Song," from the 1927 edition of the same book? The call number for the later edition is Nietz 5016799.

Again, many thanks.

Mark

Hi Mark,

As you can see, the Associate Director of the Center for American Music conducted this research herself. I hope this result is helpful to your case.

Linda,

Attached are scans of the cover, index and title page of M1994 E947 1916, The Everyday Song Book. Unfortunately, I've been unable to locate "Happy Birthday" or "Good Morning to You" in this score.

Best,
