

1 merits [and] the ability of the [plaintiff] to articulate his claims pro se in light of the complexity of the 2 legal issues involved.” Id. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

3 In the present case, the Court does not find the required exceptional circumstances. Even if it
4 assumed that plaintiff is not well versed in the law and that he has made serious allegations which, if 5 proved, would entitle him to relief, his case is not exceptional. The Court is faced with similar cases
6 almost daily. Circumstances common to most prisoners, such as lack of legal education and limited 7 law library access, do not establish exceptional circumstances that would warrant a request for 8 voluntary assistance of counsel. While the Court recognizes that Plaintiff is at a disadvantage due to 9 his pro se status and his incarceration, the test is not whether Plaintiff would benefit from the 10 appointment of counsel. See Wilborn v. Escalderon, 789 F.2d 1328, 1331 (9th Cir. 1986) (“Most 11 actions require development of further facts during litigation and a pro se litigant will seldom be in a 12 position to investigate easily the facts necessary to support the case.”) The test is whether exception 13 circumstances exist and here, they do not. The Court has yet to screen Plaintiff’s complaint and 14 cannot make a finding that Plaintiff is likely to succeed on the merits. However, based on a cursory
15 review of the complaint, it appears that Plaintiff has adequately presented his claims. Accordingly, 16 Plaintiff’s motion for the appointment of counsel is denied, without prejudice.
