IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

PATRICK WILLIAM BANKS,

Petitioner,

No. CIV S-05-797 MCE CHS P

vs.

MARK SHEPHERD, et al.,

Respondents.

FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

I. INTRODUCTION

Petitioner Patrick William Banks is a state prisoner proceeding pro se with a petition for writ of habeas corpus pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §2254. Petitioner is currently serving an indeterminate sentence of sixteen years to life following a 1989 offense and subsequent conviction in San Joaquin County for second degree murder with use of a deadly weapon. Here, petitioner does not challenge the constitutionality of that conviction, but rather, the execution of his sentence, and specifically, the July 25, 2003 decision of Governor Davis and the November 15, 2004 decision of Governor Schwarzenegger, each reversing a separate and distinct decision of the Board of Prison Terms that petitioner was suitable for parole. Based on a thorough review of the record and applicable law, it is recommended that the petition be denied.

1 II. BACKGROUND

2 The facts of petitioner's life crime were summarized at his February 26, 2003 3 parole suitability hearing:

4 [O]n February 19, 1989 at approximately 5:50 p.m., a California 5 Highway Patrol responded to a traffic collision on a highway in 6 San Joaquin County in which the victim, Lisa Rees..., died. Banks 7 and the victim, his live-in girlfriend, had an argument which was 8 followed by Banks following the victim with his vehicle at a high 9 rate of speed. He was tailgating her vehicle, driving recklessly and 10 speeding at approximately... 80 to 90 miles per hour in a 50 mile per hour zone. At one point, he ran through a red light at a high rate of speed. Banks' vehicle then either bumped the victim's vehicle from behind or they both couldn't handle a tight curve at the high rate of speed which they were driving. Both vehicles went off the embankment approximately 25 feet high causing the death of the victim from receiving head and neck injuries.

11 (Transcript of the February 26, 2003 Subsequent Parole Hearing ("2003 Transcript") at 10.)

12 Petitioner was convicted of second degree murder with use of a deadly weapon 13 and sentenced to a term of sixteen years to life in state prison. His minimum eligible parole date 14 passed on March 20, 2000. On February 26, 2003, a panel of the Board of Prison Terms 15 ("Board") conducted a second subsequent (third overall) hearing to determine petitioner's 16 suitability for parole and concluded that he was suitable for parole because he would not pose an 17 unreasonable risk of danger to society or a threat to public safety if released. On July 25, 2003, 18 Governor Davis reversed the Board's decision.

19 Petitioner challenged Governor Davis's reversal in the Sacramento County 20 Superior Court; his petition was transferred to San Joaquin County and denied in a reasoned 21 decision. The California Court of Appeal, Third District, denied petitioner's claims on appeal 22 without written explanation, and the California Supreme Court denied review.

23 In the meantime, petitioner came before the Board for another suitability 24 determination on June 28, 2004, at which time he was again found to be suitable for parole and 25 given a parole date in December of 2004. In a decision dated November 15, 2004, Governor 26 Schwarzenegger exercised his discretion to reverse this second grant of parole. Petitioner

1 IV. EXHAUSTION

2 Respondent admits that petitioner has exhausted his state court remedies with 3 respect to his claim that no evidence supported Governor Davis’s 2003 reversal. Respondent 4 denies that petitioner exhausted his claim that Governor Davis’s 2003 decision violated his 5 Eighth Amendment rights. Respondent does not contest the exhaustion of petitioner’s claims as 6 they relate to Governor Schwarzenegger’s 2004 reversal.

7 V. APPLICABLE LAW FOR FEDERAL HABEAS CORPUS

8 An application for writ of habeas corpus by a person in custody under judgment of 9 a state court can be granted only for violations of the Constitution or laws of the United States.
10 28 U.S.C. §2254(a); see also Peltier v. Wright, 15 F.3d 860, 861 (9th Cir. 1993); Middleton v.
11 Cupp, 768 F.2d 1083, 1085 (9th Cir. 1985) (citing Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 119 (1982)).
12 This petition for writ of habeas corpus was filed after the effective date of, and thus is subject to,
13 the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (“AEDPA”). Lindh v. Murphy, 521 14 U.S. 320, 326 (1997); see also Weaver v. Thompson, 197 F.3d 359 (9th Cir. 1999). Under 15 AEDPA, federal habeas corpus relief also is not available for any claim decided on the merits in 16 state court proceedings unless the state court’s adjudication of the claim:

- 17 (1) resulted in a decision that was contrary to, or involved an 18 unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States; or
- 19 (2) resulted in a decision that was based on an unreasonable 20 determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented in the State court proceeding.

21 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d); see also Penry v. Johnson, 532 U.S. 782, 792-93 (2001); Williams v.
22 Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 402-03 (2000); Lockhart v. Terhune, 250 F.3d 1223, 1229 (9th Cir. 2001).

23 VI. DISCUSSION

24 A. Due Process

25 The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits state action that 26 deprives a person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. A person alleging a due

1 process violation must first demonstrate that he or she was deprived of a protected liberty or 2 property interest, and then show that the procedures attendant upon the deprivation were not 3 constitutionally sufficient. Kentucky Dep't. of Corrections v. Thompson, 490 U.S. 454, 459-60 4 (1989); McQuillion v. Duncan, 306 F.3d 895, 900 (9th Cir. 2002).

5 A protected liberty interest may arise from either the Due Process Clause itself or 6 from state laws. Board of Pardons v. Allen, 482 U.S. 369, 373 (1987). The United States
7 Constitution does not, in and of itself, create a protected liberty interest in the receipt of a parole 8 date. Jago v. Van Curen, 454 U.S. 14, 17-21 (1981). However, if a state's statutory parole 9 scheme uses mandatory language, it "creates a presumption that parole release will be granted" 10 when or unless certain designated findings are made, thereby giving rise to a constitutional 11 liberty interest. McQuillion, 306 F.3d at 901 (quoting Greenholtz v. Inmates of Nebraska Penal, 12 442 U.S. 1, 12 (1979)).

13 California Penal Code section 3041 sets forth the legislative standards for 14 determining parole for life-sentenced prisoners such as petitioner. Subsection (a) provides that 15 "[o]ne year prior to the inmate's minimum eligible parole release date a panel... shall meet with 16 the inmate and shall normally set a parole release date." Cal Penal Code §3041(a). Subsection 17 (b) provides an exception to the regular and early setting of a lifer's term, if the Board determines 18 "that the gravity of the current convicted offense or offenses, or the timing and gravity of current 19 or past convicted offense or offenses, is such that consideration of the public safety requires a 20 more lengthy period of incarceration..." Cal. Penal Code §3041(b). The Ninth Circuit has 21 accordingly determined that California state prisoners who have been sentenced to prison with 22 the possibility of parole have a clearly established, constitutionally protected liberty interest in 23 receipt of a parole release date. Irons v. Carey, 505 F.3d 846, 850-51 (9th Cir. 2007) (citing Sass 24 v. Cal. Bd. of Prison Terms, 461 F.3d 1123, 1128 (9th Cir. 2006)); Biggs v. Terhune, 334 F.3d 25 910, 914 (9th Cir. 2003); McQuillion, 306 F.3d at 903; and Allen, 482 U.S. at 377-78 (quoting 26 Greenholtz, 442 U.S. at 12)).

1 The full panoply of rights afforded a defendant in a criminal proceeding is not 2 constitutionally mandated in the context of a parole proceeding. See Pedro v. Or. Parole Bd., 3 825 F.2d 1396, 1398-99 (9th Cir. 1987). The Supreme Court has held that a parole board’s 4 procedures are constitutionally adequate if the inmate is given an opportunity to be heard and a 5 decision informing him of the reasons he did not qualify for parole. Greenholtz, 442 U.S. at 16.

6 Additionally, as a matter of state constitutional law, denial of parole to California 7 inmates must be supported by “some evidence” demonstrating future dangerousness. Hayward v.
8 Marshall, No. 06-55392, slip op. at 34-35 (9th Cir. April 22, 2010) (en banc) (citing In re 9 Rosenkrantz, 59 P.3d 174, 210 (Cal. 2002), In re Lawrence, 190 P.3d 535, 549 (Cal. 2008), and 10 In re Shaputis, 190 P.3d 573, 582 (Cal. 2008)). The federal Due Process Clause requires, in turn, 11 that California comply with its own quantum of evidence requirement. See Hayward v.
12 Marshall, No. 06-55392, (Berzon, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part at 13). In 13 Hayward, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals directed reviewing courts in this circuit to “decide 14 whether the California judicial decision approving the governor’s decision rejecting parole was 15 an ‘unreasonable application’ of the California ‘some evidence’ requirement, or was ‘based on an 16 unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence.’ Hayward Marshall, slip op. at 17 37.

18 The analysis of whether some evidence supports denial of parole to a California 19 state inmate is framed by the state’s statutes and regulations governing parole suitability 20 determinations. See Irons, 505 F.3d at 851. This court “must look to California law to determine 21 the findings that are necessary to deem [a petitioner] unsuitable for parole, and then must review 22 the record to determine whether the state court decision holding that these findings were 23 supported by ‘some evidence’ [] constituted an unreasonable application of the ‘some evidence’ 24 principle.” Id.

25 Title 15, Section 2402 of the California Code of Regulations sets forth various 26 factors to be considered by the Board in its parole suitability findings for murderers. The

1 regulation is designed to guide the Board’s assessment of whether the inmate poses “an 2 unreasonable risk of danger to society if released from prison,” and thus whether he or she is 3 suitable for parole. In re Lawrence, 44 Cal.4th 1181, 1214, 1202 (2008). The Board is directed 4 to consider all relevant, reliable information available regarding

5 the circumstances of the prisoner’s social history; past and present 6 mental state; past criminal history, including involvement in other 7 criminal misconduct which is reliably documented; the base and 8 other commitment offenses, including behavior before, during and 9 after the crime; past and present attitude toward the crime; any conditions of treatment or control, including the use of special conditions under which the prisoner may safely be released to the community; and any other information which bears on the prisoner’s suitability for release.

10 15 Cal. Code Regs. §2402(b). The regulation also lists several specific circumstances which tend 11 to show suitability or unsuitability for parole. 15 Cal. Code Regs. §2402(c)-(d). The overriding 12 concern is public safety and the focus is on the inmate’s current dangerousness. In re Lawrence, 13 44 Cal. 4th at 1205. Thus, the proper articulation of the standard of review is not whether some 14 evidence supports the reasons cited for denying parole, but whether some evidence indicates that 15 a parolee’s release would unreasonably endanger public safety. In re Shaputis, 44 Cal.4th 1241, 16 1254 (2008). In other words, there must be some rational nexus between the facts relied upon 17 and the ultimate conclusion that the prisoner continues to be a threat to public safety. In re 18 Lawrence, 44 Cal. 4th at 1227.

19 The statutory procedure guiding the governor’s review of a parole decision of an 20 inmate sentenced to an indeterminate term for a murder conviction is contained in title 15, 21 section 3041.2 of the California Code of Regulations. Although the governor undertakes an 22 independent, de novo review of an inmate’s suitability for parole, his decision must be based on 23 the same statutory factors and the same evidentiary record that was before the Board. In re 24 Rosenkrantz, 29 Cal.4th 616, 661 (2002). The governor is entitled, however, to weigh the 25 suitability factors differently than did the Board. See Id. He may choose to be more stringent or 26 cautious in determining whether an inmate poses an unreasonable risk to public safety. In re

1 Shaputis, 44 Cal.4th at 1258. Nevertheless the governor's decision must still reflect due 2 consideration of the specified factors as applied to the individual prisoner in accordance with 3 applicable legal standards, and must be supported by some evidence in the record. In re 4 Lawrence, 44 Cal.4th 1181, 1204.

5 1. 2003 Grant of Parole and Subsequent Reversal by Governor Davis

6 a. The Board's 2003 decision

7 The Presiding Commissioner for the 2003 panel of the Board indicated their 8 reliance on several different statutory circumstances in reaching the conclusion that petitioner 9 was suitable for parole.

10 First, although petitioner has a juvenile record, they determined he has no juvenile 11 record of assaulting others. See 15 Cal. Code Regs. § 2402(d)(1). It was additionally noted that 12 petitioner has no adult arrests other than for the commitment offense. The Board appeared to 13 find that petitioner has a stable social history. See 15 Cal. Code Regs. § 2402(d)(2). He was an 14 only child raised in a stable home environment by two parents who were both well respected 15 educators in the Stockton community. It was noted that petitioner maintained close family ties 16 during his incarceration via letters and frequent visits from his parents and his two daughters.

17 The Board also found that petitioner had enhanced his ability to function within 18 the law upon release through consistent participation in educational, vocational, and other 19 institutional programming. See 15 Cal. Code Regs. § 2402(d)(9). Petitioner obtained his GED 20 while incarcerated in 1990 and later obtained his high school diploma in 1993. He completed a 21 silk screening vocation and accompanying apprenticeship program. He has consistently 22 participated in AA and NA and served at one time as Chair or Vice Chair for each program. He 23 completed various self help programs including Personal Health Assessment and Self-Energizing 24 Systems, Anger Management, Cage Your Rage, Victims' Awareness, and a Parenting Group, 25 among others, and at the time of the hearing was involved with Center Prayer Group. At the time
26 of the hearing petitioner was assigned to the Landscaping crew where he had received above

1 average evaluations.

2 Petitioner maintained positive institutional behavior while incarcerated. See 15 3 Cal. Code Regs. §2402(d)(9). His exemplary record contained no recent major or minor 4 disciplinary reports. In fact, his record was clean apart from the documentation of wearing an 5 unauthorized straw hat in 1993 and theft of state food and failure to make count in 1991.

6 The Board determined that petitioner had made realistic plans for parole. See 15 7 Cal. Code Regs. §2402(d)(8). Letters of support submitted by various family and friends on his 8 behalf demonstrated that he would have an adequate support system upon release, including 9 several offers of assistance finding future employment. Petitioner demonstrated in addition that 10 he had obtained a job offer as cook at a pizza place. Petitioner's parents offered him support 11 including a place to live; in the alternative, petitioner owns his own home and could reside there 12 with one of his daughters.

13 The Board found that petitioner had shown signs of remorse. See 15 Cal. Code 14 §2402(d)(3). It was concluded that he understands the nature and magnitude of his offense, 15 accepts responsibility for his criminal behavior, and displays a desire to change toward good 16 citizenship. The Board also found that his chances of recidivism were reduced by his 17 demonstrated maturation, growth and greater understanding coupled with his advanced age. See 18 15 Cal. Code Regs. §2402(d)(7).

19 b. Governor Davis's 2003 reversal

20 In his written decision dated July 25, 2003, Governor Davis noted the various 21 positive factors for petitioner's release:

22 Mr. Banks has made laudable progress while in prison. He has 23 earned both his high school diploma and his GED. He completed 24 vocational silk screening, graphic arts and printing. He has 25 received numerous laudatory reports for his participation in self-26 help programs, including Alcoholics Anonymous and Narcotics Anonymous. He has positive work performance reports. Mr.
Banks has expressed remorse and established viable parole plans.

(Davis Letter at 2.)

1 Ultimately, however, Governor Davis reached the opposite conclusion of the 2 Board:

3 I believe that [the positive factors for Mr. Banks' release] are 4 outweighed by negative factors demonstrating that he is unsuitable 5 for parole at this time.

6 Throughout their tumultuous relationship, Mr. Banks carried out a 7 pattern of domestic violence, including stalking, physical abuse 8 and threats of death against Ms. Rees. On the day of the murder, 9 Mr. Banks had lain in wait for Ms. Rees. Just three months before 10 the murder, he waited to confront her at her son's school, dragging 11 her off the school grounds. In that instance, police were called.
12 On the day of the murder, Ms. Rees did not wait to be attacked or 13 for police to arrive. Having previously been threatened by Mr.
14 Banks with death, Ms. Rees got in her car and fled when she saw 15 him.

16 Mr. Banks high speed pursuit of Ms. Rees was not an isolated 17 incident. Rather, it was the culmination of his pattern of abuse 18 towards women and escalating criminal conduct. Police reports 19 document Mr. Banks's history of violence in relationships, 20 including repeated instances of stalking and high speed car chases 21 involving not only Ms. Rees, but also Mr. Banks's former 22 girlfriend and her boyfriend. His extensive criminal history 23 includes three arrests for battery, three convictions for resisting 24 arrest, two convictions of excessive speeding, three convictions of 25 driving under the influence and three convictions of reckless 26 driving.

17 In light of Mr. Banks's history of domestic violence, stalking and 18 reckless driving, I believe the Board of Prison Terms gave 19 inadequate consideration to the gravity of Mr. Banks's crime. The 20 facts demonstrate that Mr. Banks carried out his violent obsession 21 with Ms. Rees, killing her in a manner demonstrating no regard for 22 human life. When Mr. Banks surprised and confronted Mr. Rees, 23 she fled in fear. He chased her at high speeds, tailgating her and 24 running a red light. His reckless driving endangered Ms. Rees and 25 countless other innocent drivers and bystanders. A witness 26 testified that Mr. Banks ultimately "rammed" the back of Ms.
Rees's car, causing both cars to fly off a 25-foot embankment.

23 Mr. Banks intentional conduct through the chase evidences 24 extreme indifference to the value of human life. It is particularly 25 serious given his history of stalking, physical abuse, similar chases 26 and convictions for excessive speeding, driving under the influence and reckless driving. This was not an isolated incident out of character for Mr. Banks. Just the opposite. It was the culmination of a pattern of violence. I believe the gravity of the offense alone is such that consideration of the public safety requires a more

1 lengthy period of incarceration.

2 The Board of Prison Terms relied on Mr. Banks's acceptance of 3 responsibility. I disagree. Although he claims to have accepted 4 responsibility, he has consistently attempted to minimize his 5 culpability. He continues to maintain that he only intended to 6 speak with Ms. Rees and did not wish to hurt her. This is 7 inconsistent with the facts and Mr. Banks's prior conduct. He 8 showed up where he knew Ms. Rees would be, hid from her view, 9 confronted her, chased her at high speeds, tailgated her and finally 10 rammed into the back of her car. Furthermore, Mr. Banks has 11 consistently attempted to minimize his actions by claiming that 12 drug and alcohol dependency was responsible for his "manic" 13 behavior. However, breathalyzer tests administered immediately 14 after the murder showed no presence of alcohol in his system.
15 At the February 2003 suitability hearing, he again claimed that Ms.
16 Rees's death was an "accident." Rather than accept responsibility 17 for her fear, injuries and death, he blamed her failure to negotiate a 18 turn at high speeds. He also denied "ramming" her with his car.
19 The fact that Mr. Banks still blames Ms. Rees's death on her 20 driving demonstrates his inability to grasp that she was running 21 away out of fear of physical violence at his hands. Mr. Banks's 22 failure to fully acknowledge his responsibility for the murder is a 23 negative factor that I find weighs against parole.

24 Mr. Banks was previously given probation several times, placed in 25 juvenile hall on six different instances and ordered to substance 26 recovery three times. He failed to benefit from these attempts at rehabilitation. Given his refusal to accept full responsibility for the death of Ms. Rees and his prior failures at rehabilitation, I believe he continues to pose an unreasonable risk to society.

I also do not believe Mr. Banks has a stable social history. He dropped out of high school in the ninth grade and at age 14 began a serious and lengthy pattern of substance abuse. In addition to alcohol abuse, he admits extensive use of methamphetamines, cocaine, heroin, marijuana, LSD, mushrooms, glue sniffing, pills, Valium, barbiturates and speed. While out on bail for Ms. Rees's murder, Mr. Banks admits to daily use of methamphetamines and heroin. As a juvenile, he engaged in an extensive course of criminal conduct. Mr. Banks's past performance within the community demonstrates that he cannot lead a successful life in an unstructured environment, another factor indicating that he is not suitable for parole.

Finally I note the San Joaquin County District Attorney's Office also found that Mr. Banks has failed to fully confront his actions and continues to minimize his history of domestic abuse. The District Attorney noted that Mr. Banks attempts to blame all of his behavior on his drug and alcohol dependency, even though there is no actual evidence that he was intoxicated at the time of the 1 murder. The deputy at the February 2003 hearing summed it up 2 very well: Alcohol didn't kill Ms. Rees. Drugs didn't kill Ms.

3 Rees. Mr. Banks killed Ms. Rees. I agree.

4 I note the numerous letters of support from Mr. Banks's family and 5 friends, I have considered these and other positive factors 6 supporting Mr. Banks's suitability for parole. However, each of 7 the negative factors individually outweighs all of the positive 8 factors. Mr. Banks has demonstrated a pattern of stalking and 9 violence against women, including prior high speed chases. He has 10 repeatedly evidenced a disregard for the lives of others, particularly 11 when behind the wheel. Yet despite the tragic and senseless 12 murder of Ms. Rees, he still fails to grasp his culpability. Thus, he 13 continues to pose an unreasonable risk of danger to society. I 14 therefore REVERSE the Board of Prison Terms' decision to parole 15 Mr. Banks.

16 (Davis Letter at 2-4.)

17 In a written decision, the San Joaquin County Superior Court held that Governor 18 Davis' reversal was supported by some evidence. The superior court did not specifically identify 19 or discuss which factors relied upon by the governor constituted some evidence in this case.

20 c. Examination of the individual factors relied upon by Governor Davis

21 Governor Davis disagreed with several of the Board's conclusions regarding 22 petitioner's suitability for parole. He appeared to rely specifically upon the following factors in 23 concluding that petitioner was not suitable to be released on parole: (i) the circumstances of the 24 commitment offense; (ii) petitioner's previous criminality and conduct prior to incarceration; (iii) 25 petitioner's lack of understanding, insight or remorse or failure to accept responsibility; and (iv) 26 petitioner's social history.

i. The commitment offense

At the outset, Governor Davis indicated that he believed the Board had given inadequate consideration to the gravity of petitioner's crime. The gravity of an inmate's commitment offense can by itself be a sufficient basis for denying parole where the facts are especially heinous or particularly egregious. In re Rosenkrantz, 29 Cal.4th 616, 682 (2002); see also Biggs v. Terhune, 334 F.3d 910, 913-16 (9th Cir. 2003); Sass v. Cal. Bd. of Prison Terms, 1 461 F.3d 1123, 1126 (9th Cir. 2006); Irons v. Carey, 505 F.3d 846, 852-53 (9th Cir. 2007).

2 There must, however, be some rational nexus between the facts of the commitment offense relied 3 upon and the ultimate conclusion that the prisoner continues to be a threat to public safety. In re
4 Lawrence, 44 Cal.4th at 1214, 1227 (“the aggravated nature of the crime does not in and of itself
5 provide some evidence of current dangerousness to the public unless the record also establishes 6 that something in the prisoner’s pre- or post-incarceration history, or [] current demeanor and 7 mental state, indicates that the implications regarding the prisoner’s dangerousness that derive 8 from his or her commission of the commitment offense remain probative to the statutory 9 determination of a continuing threat to public safety”) (emphasis in original). The relevant 10 inquiry is an individualized one: “whether the circumstances of the commitment offense, when 11 considered in light of other facts in the record, are such that they continue to be predictive of 12 current dangerousness many years after commission of the offense.” In re Lawrence, 44 Cal.4th 13 at 1221. The passage of time and attendant changes in the inmate’s psychological or mental 14 attitude are relevant considerations. Id.

15 Under the relevant regulatory scheme, a prisoner’s commitment offense tends to 16 show unsuitability for parole for where it was committed “in an especially heinous, atrocious or 17 cruel manner.” 15 Cal. Code Regs. §2402(c)(1). Although the governor repeatedly cited the 18 facts of petitioner’s commitment offense to support his reversal of the Board’s decision, the 19 offense does not appear to fit the regulatory factors that show an offense was committed in 20 especially heinous, atrocious or cruel manner. According to the relevant regulation, the factors to 21 be considered include: (A) whether multiple victims were attacked, injured or killed in the same 22 or separate incidents; (B) whether the offense was carried out in a dispassionate and calculated 23 manner, such as an execution-style murder; (C) whether the victim was abused, defiled or 24 mutilated during or after the offense; (D) whether the offense was carried out in a manner which 25 demonstrates an exceptionally callous disregard for human suffering; and (E) whether the motive 26 for the crime is inexplicable or very trivial in relation to the offense.” 15 Cal. Code Regs.

1 §2402(c)(1)(A)-(E).

2 In petitioner's case, although his reckless driving endangered many innocent 3 bystanders, it cannot be said that multiple victims were attacked, injured or killed. The offense, 4 even as described by the governor, was not so dispassionate or calculated that it compares to an 5 execution-style murder, and it involved no abuse or mutilation. The governor emphasized that 6 petitioner's intentional conduct throughout the chase evidenced extreme indifference to the value 7 of human life, which is true, but the same could be said of all murders. The relevant statutory 8 factor inquires whether the offense involved a callous disregard for human suffering and there is 9 no such evidence regarding petitioner's offense. See In re Weider, 145 Cal.App.4th 570, 587 10 (6th Dist. 2006) ("all second degree murders will involve some amount of viciousness or 11 callousness.").

12 Nor is there evidence that petitioner's motive for the offense was especially 13 trivial, within the meaning of the relevant regulation. Just as all murders show indifference to the 14 value of human life, all motives for murder could reasonably be deemed trivial in relation to the 15 offense. See In re Scott, 119 Cal.App.4th 871, 893 (1st Dist. 2004) (in order to fit the regulatory 16 description, the prisoner's motive must be more trivial than those which conventionally drive 17 people to commit the offense in question).

18 "The measure of atrociousness is not general notions of common decency or 19 social norms, for by that yardstick all murders are atrocious." In re Lee, 143 Cal.App.4th 1400, 20 1410 (2nd Dist. 2006). In this case, petitioner's offense was certainly grave and serious, 21 however, its circumstances do not appear to fit the regulatory description for one that is so 22 heinous, atrocious or cruel that it, by itself, demonstrates petitioner's unsuitability for parole. On 23 the record that was before the Board and Governor Davis in 2003, a determination that petitioner 24 was currently dangerous and unsuitable for parole based solely on the facts of his commitment 25 offense was not supported by some evidence in the record. Governor Davis cited additional 26 factors, however, in reversing the Board's decision.

1 ii. Criminal history

2 Governor Davis appeared to find the circumstances of petitioner’s commitment 3 offense especially probative to a determination of his current dangerousness because the offense 4 was “the culmination of his pattern of abuse towards women and escalating criminal conduct.”
5 The governor cited police reports documenting “repeated instances of stalking and high speed car 6 chases” involving both the victim and a previous girlfriend. He characterized petitioner’s 7 criminal history as “extensive,” including “three arrests for battery, three convictions for resisting 8 arrest, two convictions of excessive speeding, three convictions of driving under the influence 9 and three convictions of reckless driving.”

10 Under the relevant regulation, the fact that a prisoner has a previous record of 11 violence tends to show him unsuitable for release where “[t]he prisoner on previous occasions 12 inflicted or attempted to inflict serious injury on a victim, particularly if the prisoner 13 demonstrated serious assaultive behavior at an early age.” 15 Cal. Code Regs. § 2402(c)(2).
14 Conversely, the fact that a prisoner “lacks any significant history of violent crime” tends to show 15 suitability for release on parole. 15 Cal. Code Regs. § 2402(d)(6).

16 Governor Davis’ characterization of petitioner’s criminal history was markedly 17 different from that of the 2003 panel of the Board, who indicated that petitioner had “no juvenile 18 record of assaulting others... and no arrests as an adult.” (2003 Transcript at 110.) The 2003 19 Board also did not discuss petitioner’s previous stalking of another girlfriend or evidence that he 20 had engaged in another high speed chase. Nevertheless, petitioner does not contest the factual 21 findings of Governor Davis in this regard and they appear to be accurate.

22 Subsequently, at his June 28, 2004 Board hearing, petitioner admitted that he had 23 previously stalked the victim and been physically abusive on one prior occasion. He also 24 admitted that he had previously engaged in a vehicle chase of an ex-girlfriend and her boyfriend.
25 Petitioner denied that he had ever assaulted another woman besides the victim. It was 26 additionally clarified that petitioner has no other adult convictions but has been arrested as an

1 adult, once for drunk driving and possibly on another occasion for battery. (2004 Transcript at 2 19-20, 32.)

3 Petitioner’s pre-commitment criminal history includes at least one previous 4 instance of violence; the record before this court does not indicate whether, on this occasion, he 5 “inflicted or attempted to inflict serious injury” on the victim. Assuming, in addition, for 6 purposes of this opinion, that Governor Davis’s finding that petitioner has incurred three arrests 7 for battery is accurate, it remains unclear whether petitioner has inflicted or attempted to inflict 8 serious injury on previous occasions or whether he demonstrated assaultive behavior at an early 9 age.

10 Nevertheless, both the Board and the governor are empowered to consider, in 11 addition to the circumstances specified under the relevant suitability factors, “any other 12 information which bears on the prisoner’s suitability for release.” 15 Cal. Code Regs. §2402(b).
13 Governor Davis placed additional reliance on other information in petitioner’s criminal history, 14 including his prior instances of reckless driving and another high speed chase. Such reliance is 15 authorized to the extent those historical factors remain probative to a determination of 16 petitioner’s current dangerousness. The relevant question is whether petitioner’s record of 17 previous criminality and other pre-prison conduct, considered in conjunction with the facts of his 18 commitment offense, constituted some evidence that he still posed an unreasonable risk of 19 danger to the public, if released on parole, at the time of the 2003 suitability determination.

20 The passage of time can certainly attenuate the taint of prior criminal behavior, 21 and this is particularly true as applied to the consideration of misconduct which occurred prior to 22 a prisoner’s commitment offense, and thus prior to all rehabilitative efforts in prison. The Ninth 23 Circuit Court of Appeals has noted that a prisoner’s pre-commitment criminal history, much like 24 the circumstances of the commitment offense itself, is an “unchanging factor” for which 25 continued reliance upon for the denial of parole could result in a due process violation. See 26 Biggs, 334 F.3d 910, 916-917 (9th Cir. 2003); see also Irons, 505 F.3d at 853-54 (repeated denial

1 based on an unchanging factor “will at some point violate due process” where there is evidence 2 of rehabilitation and the prisoner has served the minimum term on his sentence).

3 This is not a case in which petitioner has been repeatedly denied parole based on 4 continued reliance on unchanging factors in violation of due process. Given his history of 5 criminality and violence, including the fact that he engaged in prior car chases, stalking, and at 6 least one admitted instance of domestic violence, it cannot be concluded that Governor Davis’ 7 determination that petitioner remained currently dangerous because of his commitment offense, 8 criminal history, and other pre-prison conduct was without any support in the record.

9 iii. Lack of insight or remorse

10 Governor Davis also disagreed with the Board’s conclusion that petitioner had 11 accepted responsibility for his past criminal behavior and life crime. In particular, he took issue 12 with the fact that petitioner had previously characterized the offense as an accident. The 13 governor also stated that petitioner has engaged in minimization of his actions by claiming that 14 his drug and alcohol dependency was responsible for much of his past behavior, including the 15 commitment offense. Despite the governor’s conclusion, there is no evidentiary support for a 16 finding that petitioner remained currently dangerous at the time of review because of a lack of 17 insight or remorse into his commitment offense.

18 California law is clear that petitioner cannot be required to admit guilt in order to 19 be found suitable for parole. Cal. Penal Code §5011(b); 15 Cal Code Regs. §2236. Although his 20 “past and present attitude toward the crime” and presence or lack of remorse or understanding 21 were properly considered by Governor Davis (15 Cal. Code Regs. §§ 2402(b), 2402(d)(3); In re 22 McClendon, 113 Cal. App.4th 315, 322 (1st Dist. 2003)), the fact that petitioner has previously 23 characterized the offense as an accident does not, by itself, show that he is unsuitable for parole.
24 See In re Aguilar, 168 Cal.App.4th 1479, 1491 (2nd Dist. 2008) (inmate need not admit guilt or 25 “change his story” to be found suitable for parole).

26 ////

1 Governor Davis also emphasized the fact that petitioner claimed to have been 2 drinking on the day of the offense, stating that a blood alcohol test “administered immediately 3 after the murder” showed no presence of alcohol in petitioner’s system. It is unclear how the 4 governor concluded that a breathalyzer test was administered to petitioner immediately after the 5 murder. To the contrary, petitioner indicated at his 2004 hearing that the cars wrecked at 6 approximately 6:00 p.m., and that he did not agree to take a breathalyzer test until after midnight, 7 having first refused a blood draw because he knew he had drugs in his system. The probation 8 officer’s report prepared for petitioner’s sentencing indeed indicated that “a breathalyzer test 9 revealed no alcohol in [petitioner’s] blood.” There is no indication that this test was 10 administered “immediately” after the offense, and it appears that the governor might have 11 jumped to such a conclusion. In any event, petitioner has since clarified that he had not had 12 much to drink that day, but explained why he nevertheless believes alcohol to have played a role 13 in his offense:

14 But the reason why I [blame alcohol] is because if I drink any 15 alcohol, if I drink a drink or two drinks of alcohol, I’m not a 16 normal person that can drink... I drink and then I want to go use 17 drugs. So therefore I am an alcoholic and I am a drug addict. And 18 when those two things are combined it brings out all the other 19 stuff...

18 (2004 Transcript at 27.) The fact that petitioner claimed to have been drinking on the day of his 19 offense is not evidence that he is unsuitable for parole, despite the fact that a breathalyzer test 20 administered some time later detected no alcohol in his system.

21 Governor Davis’s conclusion that petitioner lacked insight or remorse was 22 reached upon a documentary review of the evidence, in contrast to the contradictory conclusion 23 of the Board, which was reached after the opportunity to observe petitioner directly. Although 24 the governor is not bound by the Board’s findings, nothing in the record of this case contradicts 25 the Board’s determination that petitioner had shown insight and remorse. Governor Davis’ 26 conclusion that petitioner lacked remorse was also contradicted by the findings of trained

1 professionals. The most recent psychological evaluator, Dr. Macomber, wrote that it was “very 2 obvious” that petitioner was remorseful for his crime and that he “presently has a very good 3 understanding into the concrete, causative factors which led to his crime. There is no evidence 4 that he was intellectualizing in his description of events.” (2003 Transcript at 38.) Governor 5 Davis’ unsupported scepticism of the psychological evaluator’s conclusion in this regard does 6 not constitute reliable evidence that petitioner remains dangerous. See In re Roderick, 154 7 Cal.App.4th 242, 272 (1st. Dist. 2007) (Board’s arbitrary pronouncement that an inmate lacks 8 insight “cannot be considered some evidence to support a denial of parole” where unanimous 9 clinical evidence to the contrary is presented by trained experts). There is no reliable evidence in 10 the record that petitioner remained unsuitable for parole at the time of the 2003 hearing because 11 he lacked insight or remorse into his previous criminality, including the commitment offense.

12 iv. Social history

13 Finally, Governor Davis disagreed with the Board’s determination that petitioner 14 had a stable social history. Governor Davis appeared to base his finding that petitioner lacked a 15 stable social history upon petitioner’s past drug abuse, his juvenile criminal record, and the fact 16 that he dropped out of high school in the ninth grade. An “unstable social history” in the parole 17 suitability context, however, is defined as a “history of unstable or tumultuous relationships with 18 others.” 15 Cal. Code Regs. §2402 (c)(3). In contrast, a prisoner with a stable social history “has 19 experienced reasonably stable relationships with others.” 15 Cal. Code Regs. §2402(d)(2)).
20 There is no indication in the regulation that drug abuse, a juvenile criminal record, or dropping 21 out of school are relevant to the consideration of a prisoner’s social history. See 15 Cal. Code 22 Regs. §§ 2402(c)(3), 2402(d)(2).

23 Petitioner’s past drug abuse, juvenile criminal record, and failure to finish high 24 school do not show that he has a history of unstable or tumultuous relationships with others.
25 Governor Davis noted elsewhere in the decision, however, that petitioner had a tumultuous 26 relationship with the victim prior to her murder. This is certainly an accurate factual finding with

1 ample support in the record. In petitioner's words, they had "a very wild and crazy relationship" 2 in which "she would leave and come back and at times... I would leave. And with the drugs and 3 alcohol , it was out of control." (2003 Hearing at 11, 17.) Petitioner further explained that they 4 both abused methamphetamine and cocaine and that there was "a lot of promiscuity going on."
5 (2003 Hearing at 17.)

6 The fact that petitioner had an extremely tumultuous relationship with the victim 7 of his life crime does not constitute reliable evidence, by itself, that he was unsuitable for parole.
8 Considered in conjunction with his commitment offense, criminal history and other pre-prison 9 conduct, including prior car chases, stalking, and domestic violence, however, Governor Davis 10 could reasonably conclude that there was some evidence at the time of the 2003 suitability 11 determination that petitioner remained unsuitable for parole. Thus, in spite of the fact that some 12 of Governor Davis' findings are not supported by the record or are supported only in a limited 13 sense, petitioner is not entitled to relief from Governor Davis' decision. While there was 14 certainly evidence in the record that would have supported a contrary conclusion, the governor's 15 determination that the positive factors did not outweigh the gravity of petitioner's offense, 16 criminal history, and other pre-prison conduct did not, on the facts of this case, violate his right 17 to due process.

18 2. 2004 Board Decision and Subsequent Reversal by Governor Schwarzenegger

19 a. The Board's 2004 grant of parole

20 The 2004 panel of the Board indicated its reliance upon the following 21 circumstances in concluding that petitioner was suitable for parole and would not pose an 22 unreasonable risk of danger to society or a threat to public safety if released from prison:

23 The Panel did have an opportunity to review the prisoner's juvenile 24 record. It does not appear that there was any record of assaultive 25 behavior as a juvenile. However, there is a juvenile record that 26 started somewhere around 4 October, 1974 and that includes possession of marijuana, disturbance of school activities. There was a burglary, driving drunk, speeding, possession of a hypodermic needle. And there was a resisting arrest but it doesn't

1 say it was assaultive. A malicious mischief, another drunk driving 2 and another resisting arrest. Possession of a controlled substance.
3 And there was another resisting arrest. And there was also a 242 4 battery disposition and he was sent to a recover house when an 5 opening was available. So it appears in retrospect, in looking at his 6 juvenile record, there were some assaultive behaviors. At least an 7 arrest for an assaultive behavior. So we need to amend the record 8 to indicate that prisoner was at least arrested for assaultive 9 behavior as a juvenile. However, the Board did take that into 10 consideration... We still found that he was suitable for parole.
11 However, there's every indication that while in prison the prisoner 12 has enhanced his ability to function within the law upon release.
13 And we say that because he participated in educational programs.
14 We note that he received a GED in 1990 and also there was a high 15 school diploma in 1993. We also note that self-help programs, the 16 prisoner has participated in an array of self-help programs, to 17 include... Impact of Crime, a victim's personal help, and self-18 energizing system. Parenting, anger management, and also, which 19 is very important, there seemed to be an ongoing participation in 20 substance abuse programs, NA or AA-type programs. So certainly 21 we feel that has gone a long ways in the prisoner's demonstrating 22 that he's ready for parole. We also note that he did complete a 23 vocational program, silkscreening. He completed that in 1999. He 24 also completed the apprenticeship that goes along with that, so 25 certainly we want to give him some accolades for that. We also 26 note that he's currently participating in the institutional work program as a gardener and there are chronos, not job reports but there are chronos, from supervisors noting that he's doing a very good job. Because of maturation, growth, greater understanding and advanced age we feel that this [has] reduced the probability of recidivism. The prisoner is in his early 40s and hasn't received any disciplinary for quite some time. The last disciplinary that he received was back on 2/16/91 for theft of state property and 3/18/91 for failing to respond for count. So that's been a significant amount of time. And we do feel that that's important in that we want to give him some accolades for his disciplinary-free behavior. Because he has demonstrated that he can program in a structured environment we think that's important. We also reviewed his file and note that those were the only two disciplinary, on 3/18/91 and 2/16/91. We also note that there's a 128(c) in the file for altering a state hat and that was on 7/2/1992.
We took all three of those disciplinarys into consideration and still found that the prisoner is suitable. So we did completely review all of his disciplinarys. We do feel that the prisoner has a realistic parole plan, which includes a job offer and a place to support (sic).
He has family support. He has maintained close family ties via letters and I think that's quite evident today. When we were reading through his letters we do note that his mother and father have kept in contact with him. His daughter have (sic) kept in contact with him. And his daughter even cited in her letter that she visited him and brought the grandbaby to visit him, so he have (sic)

1 maintained close family ties. And it appears that he will be living 2 with his daughter so that's certainly in his favor. As I previously 3 mentioned, he recently maintained positive institutional behavior, 4 which indicates a significant improvement in self-control. We do 5 feel that the prisoner shows signs of remorse. He indicated that he 6 understands the nature and magnitude of the offense and accepts 7 responsibility for his criminal behavior and has a desire to change 8 towards good citizenship. And we think, as articulated in his 9 counselor's report and both the psychological report, both of those 10 reports tend to indicate or lend support that the prisoner have (sic) 11 a desire to change towards good citizenship. We note that the 12 correctional counselor writes in his most recent report, he feels 13 that-- He says, considering the offense, commitment offense, prior 14 record, psychological report, the BPT decision and prior 15 adjustment this writer believes that Banks would probably pose a 16 low degree of threat to the public at this time if released from 17 prison. Banks have (sic) accepted full responsibility for his crime.
18 And he also notes that hte prisoner has been clean and sober since 19 the end of July 1989 and he has plans to continue with NA and AA 20 when paroled from prison. He also notes that the prisoner has 21 maintained positive contact with the victim's son, aunt, 22 grandmother and father. The prisoner has established home 23 ownership along with a portfolio of investments and savings 24 accounts to financially assist him when released back into society.
25 So certainly it's a very good report from the correctional counselor.
26 The recent psychological report shows that the prisoner is making progress. The most recent psychological report was completed for the February 2000 Board report. And that report was completed by Dr. Melvin Macomber. Dr. Macomber reports, assessment to dangerousness within the controlled setting of the institution is definitely below average in comparison to other inmates.
Assessment of dangerousness if released to the community at this point in time is definitely below average in comparison with other inmates. In fact, his potential for violence in the community, if not lower, due to his growth experiences in prison and knowledge of the effects of aggressive behavior. In this case the only risk factors were drugs and alcohol, however, the potential of this man reverting to drug or alcohol abuse is essentially nil. So the doctor's really putting himself out on the limb there. It's a very good report. We feel that the prisoner is -- have (sic) made progress in that area. And we go back to that desire for good citizenship so it's certainly documented. Macomber feels that the prisoner have (sic) a desire for good citizenship and certainly that played a role in the Board's suitability finding. Another letter from Dr. Macomber-- Not another letter but a psychological report, 7/3/01. It's a very short report but in his assessment he said, Mr. Banks continued to make a good adjustment. His attitude is very good. There is no evidence of psychopathology that will require therapeutic intervention. There is no evidence of psychological problems that would preclude his release to parole supervision. Violence potential continues to be low. So certainly that's in his favor. The 1 next report, full evaluation that I took a look at, goes all the way 2 back to 1999. In that report Dr. Savage..., clinical psychologist, 3 it's dated 10/26. He writes, Inmate Banks appears to present a 4 lower than average dangerousness within a controlled setting. If 5 released to the community his risk of out of control or 6 unpredictable behavior would be in direct proportion to his using 7 drugs or alcohol. He is devoutly committed to his 12 step program 8 and does not appear at risk for a relapse. This one crime is his only 9 violent crime and does appear to have been an accident. He 10 appears to be a low risk of re-offending. So we took a look at the 11 last three psychological evaluations by two different clinicians and 12 they all seem to come to the same conclusion. That this prisoner 13 have (sic) a desire to be a good citizen and he addressed the issues 14 of the causative factors that caused him to commit the crime that 15 he committed. So those are some of the reasons that we again 16 found the prisoner suitable...

17 (2004 Transcript at 86-92.)

18 b. Governor Schwarzenegger's 2003 reversal

19 This time, the Board's decision that petitioner was suitable to be released on 20 parole was reversed by Governor Schwarzenegger. Governor Schwarzenegger recounted the 21 circumstances of petitioner's commitment offense and "rocky" pre-prison lifestyle, but also 22 considered several factors that were supportive of petitioner's parole. He concluded that 23 The gravity of the second degree murder for which Mr. Banks was 24 convicted is alone a sufficient basis on which to conclude that his 25 release from prison at this time would pose an unreasonable public 26 safety risk.

After serving 14 years of his 16-to life prison sentence, Mr. Banks has made some creditable gains. But after carefully considering the same factors that the Board of Prison Terms must consider, I find the gravity of the murder committed by Mr. Banks presently outweighs all factors tending to support his parole and necessitates a longer period of incarceration. Accordingly, because I believe Mr. Banks would pose an unreasonable risk of danger to society if released from prison at this time, I REVERSE the Board's 2004 decision to grant parole to Mr. Banks.

(Schwarzenegger Letter at 3.) Governor Schwarzenegger placed particular emphasis on the fact that the commitment offense was "the culmination of months of torment" of the victim by petitioner, and the fact that it was not the first time that petitioner had used his vehicle in a

1 potentially deadly manner. In concluding that the gravity of petitioner's offense outweighed all 2 positive factors for parole, Governor Schwarzenegger, like Governor Davis, considered and 3 relied on petitioner's other pre-prison conduct in addition to the offense itself. He wrote:

4 [T]he murder of Ms. Rees was especially atrocious because it was 5 not the first time Mr. Banks had used his vehicle in a deadly 6 manner, particularly when angry or frustrated. In addition to his 7 one-year earlier conviction for driving while impaired, in October 8 1986, Mr. Banks drove his truck in front of the car of his ex-9 girlfriend Tanya, blocking her path and threatening to kidnap her.
10 On another occasion, he waited all night outside of a house until he 11 saw Tanya and her new boyfriend leave in separate cars-- and then 12 chased them in his truck and attempted to run Tanya's boyfriend 13 off the road.

14 Nor was the night of the deadly chase the first time Mr. Banks had 15 tormented Ms. Rees. He admitted at his 2004 hearing that in 16 October 1988, just months before the murder, he kidnapped Ms.
17 Rees, tied her to a bed, and hit her with the butt of a rifle. When 18 asked by the Board why he had done this, Mr. Banks replied, "I 19 was very angry, hurt, insecure and under the influence of drugs and 20 alcohol." According to the probation report, in November 1988, 21 police were called when Mr. Banks was seen dragging Ms. Rees 22 from the school where she had gone to pick up her son. Ms. Rees 23 told the police that Mr. Banks had threatened to beat her, had made 24 threats to kill her, and that she had purchased a gun because she 25 was afraid of him. Mr. Banks acknowledged that this incident had 26 occurred and told the 2004 Board, "Again, I was angry at the time, frustrated."

He further admitted to the 2004 Board that he stalked Ms. Rees during the week before her murder and just days before the murder had threatened to kill her. Based on the record before me, there is evidence that the murder of Ms. Rees was the culmination of months of torment by Mr. Banks.

(Schwarzenegger letter at 2.)

Governor Schwarzenegger's reliance on petitioner's commitment offense and its timing in light of the specific nature of his criminal history and other pre-prison conduct was not without support in the record. Simply put, at the time of the 2004 hearing, not enough time had passed to allow a reviewing court such as this one to say that reliance on such unchanging factors was arbitrary or that such factors no longer held any probative value. Although there were many positive factors for petitioner's release, this court is not authorized to weigh those factors against

1 the others relevant to a parole suitability determination. It is enough that there was some 2 evidence to support the governor's determination that the circumstances of petitioner's 3 commitment offense, criminal history, and other pre-prison conduct required a more lengthy 4 period of incarceration.

5 B. Eighth Amendment

6 Petitioner additionally contends that the denial of parole has implicated his Eighth 7 Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment. As previously set forth, 8 respondent denies that petitioner exhausted his Eighth Amendment claim with respect to 9 Governor Davis's 2003 reversal. Nevertheless, this claim can still be decided on the merits. See 10 Gutierrez v. Griggs, 695 F.2d 1195, 1198 (9th Cir. 1983) ("a district court may dismiss a habeas 11 petition without resolving whether a petitioner has exhausted available state remedies when on 12 the face of the petition it is obvious that the petition lacks merit").

13 A criminal sentence that is not proportionate to the crime of conviction may 14 indeed violate the Eighth Amendment. Outside of the capital punishment context, however, the 15 Eighth Amendment "forbids only extreme sentences that are grossly disproportionate to the 16 crime." United States v. Bland, 961 F.2d 123, 129 (9th Cir. 1992) (quoting Harmelin v.
17 Michigan, 501 U.S. 957, 1001 (1991) (Kennedy, J., concurring). The gross disproportionality 18 rule set forth by the Supreme Court in Harmelin is the only clearly established law applicable to 19 petitioner's Eighth Amendment challenge. Lockyer v. Andrade, 538 U.S. 63, 73 (2003).

20 The threshold for an inference of gross disproportionality is high. Generally, so 21 long as the sentence imposed by the state court does not exceed statutory maximums, it will not 22 be considered cruel and unusual punishment under the Eighth Amendment. United States v.
23 Mejia-Mesa, 153 F.3d 925, 930 (9th Cir. 1998) ("punishment within legislatively mandated 24 guidelines is presumptively valid"); United States v. McDougherty, 902 F.2d 569, 576 (9th Cir.
25 1990).

26 ////

1 In Harmelin v. Michigan, the Supreme Court held that a term of life in prison
2 without the possibility of parole is not disproportionate to the crime of possession of 672 grams 3 of cocaine. 501 U.S. 957, 1009 (1991). As the Ninth Circuit observed, “[u]nder Harmelin, it is 4 clear that a mandatory life sentence for murder does not constitute cruel and unusual 5 punishment.” United States v. LaFleur, 971 F.2d 200, 211 (9th Cir. 1991). Of course, in this 6 case, petitioner did not receive a mandatory life sentence, but rather, a life sentence which carries 7 the possibility of parole. To the extent petitioner contends his sentence was effectively 8 transformed into one without the possibility of parole, the argument must be rejected. So long as 9 each parole decision by the Board or, in this case, the governor, is supported by some evidence in 10 the record it cannot be said that the sentence was converted to one of life without the possibility 11 of parole. The state court decisions upholding the respective reversals of Governor Davis and 12 Governor Schwarzenegger are not contrary to, or an unreasonable application of the gross 13 disproportionality principle. Accordingly, there can be no relief for petitioner’s Eighth 14 Amendment challenges to the denial of parole.

15 C. State Law Violations

16 Despite references to the Due Process Clause, it appears that petitioner’s grounds 17 two and three allege only violations of state law.

18 The state courts’ interpretation and analysis of the proper application of section 19 3041 of the California Penal Code and its implementing regulations may not be challenged in this 20 federal habeas corpus action. See, e.g., Bradshaw v. Richey, 546 U.S. 74, 76 (2005) (state court’s 21 interpretation of state law binds a court sitting in habeas corpus); Estelle v. McGuire, 502 U.S.
22 62, 67-68 (1991) (“It is not the province of a federal habeas court to reexamine state-court 23 determinations on state-law questions”); Middleton v. Cupp, 768 F.2d 1083, 1085 (9th Cir.
24 1985).

25 For the same reason, petitioner’s alleged violation of the separation of powers 26 doctrine of the California Constitution does not give rise to a claim for federal habeas corpus

1 relief. To the extent petitioner contends that the governors' exercise of discretion violated the 2 federal doctrine of separation of powers, the claim is not cognizable because the federal doctrine 3 of separation of powers does not extend to the states under the Fourteenth Amendment. See 4 Hughes v. Superior Court, 339 U.S. 460, 467 (1950) ("the Fourteenth Amendment leaves the 5 States free to distribute the powers of government as they will between their legislative and 6 judicial branches"). There can be no relief for petitioner's claims that the denial of parole 7 violated state law.

VII. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, IT IS HEREBY RECOMMENDED that Petitioner's application for writ of habeas corpus be DENIED.

These findings and recommendations are submitted to the United States District Judge assigned to the case, pursuant to the provisions of 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1). Within twenty days after being served with these findings and recommendations, any party may file written objections with the court and serve a copy on all parties. Such a document should be captioned "Objections to Magistrate Judge's Findings and Recommendations." Any reply to the objections shall be served and filed within ten days after service of the objections. The parties are advised that failure to file objections within the specified time may waive the right to appeal the District Court's order. Martinez v. Ylst, 951 F.2d 1153 (9th Cir. 1991).
