IDENTITY AND INTEREST OF *AMICUS CURIAE

Amicus curiae Anti-Defamation League (“ADL”) is a non-profit organization that fights anti-Semitism and all forms of bigotry, defends democratic ideals, and protects civil rights for all. ADL has regional offices across the country, including five offices in California.

ADL is a leading organization in preventing and responding to hate crimes, having drafted the nation’s first model hate crime law and having led a large coalition advocating for the passage of the federal Matthew Shepard and James Byrd, Jr. Hate Crimes Prevention Act. ADL has also been recognized as a leading resource on effective responses to violent bigotry and building bridges of communication, understanding, and respect among diverse communities. To support those aims, ADL trains law enforcement on issues including hate crimes and implicit bias.

ADL is uniquely situated to assist the Court in evaluating the United States’ requested preliminary injunction. Specifically, ADL can provide perspective on the likely suppressive effect of the injunction on the reporting and prevention of crimes, including hate crimes. ADL’s arguments thus further demonstrate, beyond the parties’ briefing, why this Court should deny the preliminary injunction.

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 29(a)(4)(E), ADL states that no party’s counsel authored this brief in whole or in part, and no party, party’s counsel, or other person contributed money intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief.

1 I. INTRODUCTION

2 The preliminary injunction that the United States seeks is not only unconstitutional, but 3 deliberately seeks to undo the protections that California law provides to its most vulnerable 4 communities and residents. Enjoining the provisions of California’s duly enacted Senate Bill 54 5 (“SB 54”), Assembly Bill 450 (“AB 450”), and Assembly Bill 103 (“AB 103”) – as the United 6 States requests – would force California to set aside critical protections designed to build trust 7 and cooperation between law enforcement officials and immigrant and minority communities.
8 The resulting erosion of trust between police and citizens would leave a large segment of the 9 population more vulnerable to crimes, especially hate crimes. Indeed, the effects of the 10 injunction would be felt most acutely by those members of society most in need of protection.

11 California’s laws are carefully crafted to comply with federal immigration law, yet at the 12 same time guarantee that citizens are not deterred from reporting crimes or otherwise engaging 13 with local law enforcement because of fears that the authorities will question their immigration 14 status. The goal is to ensure that local law enforcement is focused on deterring and responding 15 to crimes rather than on whether the victim, witness, or offender is an immigrant. In addition to 16 conserving limited resources, California’s statutes are thus designed to assist local law 17 enforcement – i.e., to advance police-community relations and encourage community members 18 to come forward to report crimes, and turn to police for protection without the fear that their 19 immigration or citizenship status will subject them to legal action themselves.

20 As California officials and law enforcement leaders around the nation have attested, there 21 is a demonstrable risk that both documented and undocumented immigrants would be dissuaded 22 from engaging with local enforcement efforts, including efforts to combat hate crime, if the 23 requested injunction is entered. In the wake of the anti-immigrant rhetoric and policies 24 advocated by the current Administration, members of immigrant groups already justifiably fear 25 that the police will report their immigration information – or that of a family member or friend – 26 to Immigration and Customs Enforcement (“ICE”), thereby resulting in detention and/or 27 deportation. As a consequence, many individuals are avoiding contact with law enforcement, 28 causing immediate irreparable harm to communities in California and across the country.

1 In the experience of ADL, this break-down of trust and cooperation between police and 2 minority communities leaves communities more vulnerable to hate crimes. Moreover, the 3 resulting lawlessness compromises the safety of all citizens and residents, as the elimination of 4 trust in local law enforcement makes it much harder for law enforcement to get the information 5 they need from immigrant communities to prevent crime, including in particular hate crime.
6 Accordingly, ADL submits this amicus brief in support of California and urges this Court to 7 deny the United States’ request for a preliminary injunction. Only denial of the injunction can 8 prevent the immediate and irreparable harm that will otherwise ensue from the consequent 9 erosion of trust and cooperation between immigrant communities and law enforcement.

10 II. ARGUMENT

11 A. The California Statutes at Issue Are Aimed at Protecting Victims and 12 Witnesses of Crimes.

13 Contrary to the United States’ assertions, the California laws at issue were not “intended 14 to uniquely impede the enforcement of the immigration laws” (Plaintiff’s Motion for a 15 Preliminary Injunction at 32); rather, they were enacted to secure the enforcement of state 16 criminal law, in particular by encouraging victims and witnesses to come forward and report 17 crime, and to protect the rights of vulnerable communities in California.

18 Specifically, SB 54 was enacted to facilitate the reporting of crimes and strengthen 19 community policing efforts by defining when law enforcement agencies (“LEAs”) may use their 20 resources to assist the federal government with immigration enforcement. See Cal. Gov’t Code § 21 7284.6. AB 450 was enacted to protect the privacy rights of California workers when the federal 22 government seeks to conduct inspections. See Cal. Gov’t Code §§ 7285.1, 7285.2; Cal. Lab.
23 Code §§ 90.2, 1019.2. And, AB 103 was enacted to protect the welfare and due process rights of 24 those detained in California for civil immigration-enforcement purposes. See Cal. Gov’t Code § 25 12532. These statutes are designed to build trust between LEAs and immigrant communities in 26 California by eliminating the fear that any interaction with law enforcement will inevitably lead 27 to deportation, while also allowing LEAs to engage with federal immigration enforcement when 28

1 serious crime is at issue. Moreover, they help protect the safety, well-being, and rights of all 2 people in California.

3         The statutes, along with other policies and statutes in California, are thus expressly aimed 4 at fostering cooperation and communication between law enforcement and the public. This is 5 the cornerstone of “community policing,” which is based on forging partnerships between law 6 enforcement and community members and groups. The U.S. Department of Justice itself has 7 affirmed that the value of community policing efforts depends in the first instance on 8 establishing trust between the community and law enforcement, because “[c]itizens who do not 9 trust the police are less likely to report crime and participate in developing solutions to 10 problems.”<sup>1</sup> A critical element of developing this trust – and the animating purpose behind the 11 adoption of the state laws that the United States now challenges – is creating an environment in 12 which both victims and witnesses are willing to come forward and actively participate in 13 criminal investigations. California’s protective statutes are designed to do just that, i.e., to 14 encourage community members – regardless of their immigration or citizenship status – to 15 contact and cooperate with local police without fear of deportation or other immigration 16 consequences. Public safety throughout this nation depends on all community members having 17 this trust.

18             B.         The United States’ Requested Injunction Suppresses Reporting of Crimes
19                             and Compromises Community Safety.

20         If the Court grants the United States’ motion for a preliminary injunction, the California 21 statutes would be dead letters, and the community safety and trust that California has fostered 22 over decades of community policing would be replaced by suspicion and fear. By undermining 23 critical protective statutes and coercing local law enforcement agencies to enforce a federal 24 immigration program, the requested injunction would drive a wedge between police officers and 25 the residents they protect. Immigrants and members of communities with large immigrant

1 populations would reasonably fear that their interaction with law enforcement would necessarily 2 lead to unwanted interaction with ICE. As a result, both undocumented and documented 3 immigrants will be unwilling to report crimes and to assist in police investigations out of 4 justifiable fear that contact with local police will lead to their detention and/or deportation, or 5 that of a family member or friend.<sup>2</sup>

6 California’s recognition that enforcement of state criminal law should be delinked, where 7 possible, from the enforcement of federal immigration law simply echoes what the federal 8 government itself has previously acknowledged. Indeed, federal agencies have expressly 9 affirmed the importance of encouraging undocumented victims to report criminal activity and 10 cooperate in the prosecution of crimes. As but one example, 8 C.F.R. § 245.24 provides an 11 incentive for undocumented immigrants who are victims of certain enumerated crimes to report 12 those crimes, and thereby become eligible to apply for lawful immigration status. U.S.
13 Citizenship and Immigration Services has stated that the purpose of this provision is “to 14 strengthen the ability of law enforcement agencies to investigate and prosecute cases of domestic 15 violence, sexual assault, trafficking of aliens and other crimes, while also protecting victims of 16 crimes.”<sup>3</sup>

17 Consistent with these observations, research has confirmed that the fear of retribution 18 following interaction with law enforcement has serious practical implications for community 19 safety.<sup>4</sup> Indeed, this Administration’s immigration-related policies have exacerbated fears and

1 anxieties, and thus already changed the landscape of the community’s interaction with law
2 enforcement. Since last year, there has been decreased crime reporting in the Latino 3 community.<sup>5</sup> For example, in Houston and Los Angeles, rape reports by Latinos went down by 4 42.8 and 25 percent, respectively, from 2016.<sup>6</sup> Reports of spousal abuse by Latino victims have 5 declined by 18, 13, and 3.5 percent in San Francisco, San Diego, and Los Angeles, respectively, 6 as compared to 2016, while reporting among non-Latinos has remained the same.<sup>7</sup> The decline 7 in reports of sexual assault, in particular, has led to increased difficulty in investigating and 8 prosecuting domestic violence.<sup>8</sup> In a 2017 survey of law enforcement personnel across the 9 country, officers reported a “decline in cooperation and a rise in fear of law enforcement” among 10 immigrant communities.<sup>9</sup> This decline in cooperation “is leading to increased recidivism by 11 perpetrators of a range of crimes in their communities, including domestic and sexual violence 12 crimes.”<sup>10</sup> The overall effect of enjoining California’s protective statutes would not be a 13 reduction in crime, but rather an increase in crime, as the necessary trust and cooperation 14 between the police and local communities is reduced.

15           Moreover, contrary to the United States’ assertions, there is demonstrable evidence that 16 “sanctuary” policies, such as the policies that animate the statutes at issue, reduce crime. For 17 example, one study completed in early 2017 compared counties with a “sanctuary” policy – i.e., 18 counties that do not assist federal immigration enforcement officials by holding people in

1 custody beyond their release date – with non-sanctuary counties that were similar on a broad 2 range of demographic characteristics. The study concluded that “[t]here are, on average, 35.5 3 fewer crimes committed per 10,000 people in sanctuary counties compared to nonsanctuary 4 counties.”<sup>11</sup> Additionally, a recent survey of undocumented Mexican nationals in San Diego 5 County found that that “if local law enforcement officials were working together with ICE, 60.8 6 percent said they are less likely to report a crime they witnessed, and 42.9 percent said they are 7 less likely to report being a victim of crime.”<sup>12</sup> Research has shown that “enlisting local law 8 enforcement agencies to enforce federal immigration law can drive undocumented immigrants 9 deeper into the shadows.”<sup>13</sup>

10 If the United States’ requested injunction is granted, the harms that will occur from the 11 breakdown of community policing and crime reporting will be immediate and irreparable. It will 12 be difficult – if not impossible – for local police to rebuild the bonds of trust and cooperation

1 to, a model statute drafted by ADL.<sup>14</sup> The landmark Matthew Shepard and James Byrd Jr. Hate
2 Crimes Prevention Act of 2009 (“HCPA”) created a new federal law which criminalizes willfully 3 causing bodily injury when the crime was committed because of the actual or perceived race, 4 color, religion, or national origin of the victim, or the crime was committed because of actual or 5 perceived religion, national origin, gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, or disability, and 6 the crime affected interstate or foreign commerce or occurred within federal special maritime 8 effective response to and prevention of hate crimes, which “are disturbingly prevalent, [] pose a 9 significant threat to the full participation of all Americans in our democratic society,” and “are 10 significantly under-reported.”<sup>15</sup> This Congressional commitment to protecting the most 11 vulnerable communities in our society will be directly undermined, and irreparably harmed, by 12 enjoining the California statutes at issue.

13 ADL has closely monitored and exposed the increasingly hateful anti-immigrant, anti-14 Latino, and anti-Muslim rhetoric that has surrounded the national debate on immigration

6 People within immigrant communities are especially vulnerable to hate crime.<sup>21</sup> One

1 the majority (54 percent) of hate crime victimizations in the U.S. were not reported to the 2 police.<sup>24</sup>

3 Moreover, the most likely victims of hate crimes are also those least likely to report those 4 crimes.<sup>25</sup> These individuals are often immigrants who face cultural and language barriers, along 5 with fear of deportation or reprisal if they report incidents to the police.<sup>26</sup> Immigrant victims of 6 crime often do not recognize the victimization they face as a crime and, even when a victim 7 overcomes substantial barriers and reports a crime, “the crime may not be recognized as bias 8 motivated by the local police because of lack of training or language difficulties.”<sup>27</sup>

9 These barriers extend beyond the fear of reporting violent crimes to infect every aspect of 10 immigrant life. Indeed, people within immigrant communities are particularly susceptible to 11 economic crimes, including wage theft and other employer abuses.<sup>28</sup> Day laborers are easy 12 targets for unscrupulous employers, who hire them and then disappear before paying their day’s 13 wages.<sup>29</sup> Workers who are robbed of their wages are often afraid to report the theft because of 14 their immigration status. As Professor Stephen Lee of the University of California, Irvine School 15 of Law stated, “[D]istrust of the police effectively neutralizes the potential of wage theft statutes 16 when enforced against employers who hire unauthorized immigrant workers.”<sup>30</sup>

1 If the United States' requested preliminary injunction is entered, victims and witnesses 2 will hesitate to contact law enforcement when doing so may subject them or their family 3 members to possible detention or deportation in the absence of statutory protections. Combined 4 with the current atmosphere surrounding the immigration debate, this lack of community 5 engagement will leave vast portions of the population especially vulnerable to hate crimes and 6 other criminal attacks. Offenders will specifically target victims in immigrant communities 7 without fear of prosecution. Indeed, it effectively will create an underclass of people – primarily, 8 although by no means exclusively, in the Latino community – who have no meaningful access to 9 police services. These effects of the United States' actions are immediate and irreparable – law 10 enforcement officials around the nation have spent countless hours building relationships with 11 immigrant communities that now are being threatened or destroyed.

12 III. CONCLUSION

13 For the foregoing reasons, ADL requests that the Court deny the United States' Motion
