1 By reducing the power disparity between employers and employees when it comes 2 to dealing with immigration authorities, AB 450 ensures that immigrant workers are 3 better able to enforce their labor rights. In this way, AB 450's provisions are not 4 anathema to Congress's objectives, but rather reconcilable with them.

5 To prevail on a claim of conflict preemption, the United States must do more than 6 suggest that AB 450 makes the job of immigration authorities "more difficult." Baker &
7 Drake, Inc. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n of Nev. (In re Baker & Drake, Inc.), 35 F.3d 1348, 8 1354 (9th Cir. 1994). Preemption is found only in "those situations where conflicts will 9 necessarily arise." Goldstein v. California, 412 U.S. 546, 554 (1973). AB 450 is a 10 legitimate exercise of California's police powers. The federal scheme does not rely on 11 immigration authorities having voluntary access to workplaces. The Court should find 12 that the United States has not met its burden to show a likelihood of success on its 13 preemption claim.

14 Further, the Court should not expand the doctrine of intergovernmental immunity 15 in the way the United States requests. States need room to innovate to meet the labor and 16 employment challenges of our time. A preliminary injunction is an "extraordinary and 17 drastic remedy, one that should not be granted unless the movant, by a clear showing, 18 carries the burden of persuasion," Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972 (1997) (per 19 curiam) (quoting 11A C. Wright, A. Miller & M. Kane, Federal Practice 20 and Procedure 2948 (2d ed. 1995)). The Court should deny the United States' motion.

21 ARGUMENT

22 I. The United States' Presentation of the Legislative Purposes and Objectives of 23 IRCA Is Incomplete

24 In order to succeed on a claim that AB 450 is preempted because it conflicts with 25 federal law, the United States must show that it "stands as an obstacle to the 26 accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress." Arizona
27 v. United States, 567 U.S. 387, 399-400 (2012) (citation omitted). The United States 28 would have the Court believe that IRCA's purpose—like that of the current

1 administration’s—is singularly focused on maximizing immigration enforcement in the 2 workplace. Mot. for Prelim. Inj. 11-2, ECF No. 2-1 (“PI Motion”). However, as amici 3 explain below, Congress’s purpose in enacting IRCA was far more nuanced than the 4 United States suggests, reflecting a balance of a range of interests. Arizona, 567 U.S. at 5 405. Notably, Congress focused its sanctions on employers and deliberately did not 6 impose additional penalties on employees; it recognized that marginalizing 7 undocumented workers “who already face the possibility of employer exploitation” 8 would incentivize employers to hire them and depress working conditions generally, 9 thereby undermining IRCA’s success. Id. at 399. To evaluate the United States’ claim 10 properly, the Court must assess these “purposes and objectives of Congress” by engaging 11 in an examination of IRCA’s text and legislative history. Id. at 399 (citation omitted).

12 Congress enacted IRCA in 1986 to “combat[] the employment of [unauthorized 13 immigrants][.]” Hoffman Plastic Compounds, Inc. v. NLRB, 535 U.S. 137, 147 (2002).
14 The measure was the product of a lengthy legislative process dating back to 1971. S. Rep.
15 No. 99-132, at 18-26 (1985) (discussing the 15-year history of IRCA). Upon signing the 16 bill, President Reagan described IRCA as “one of the longest and most difficult 17 legislative undertakings of recent memory.” Statement of President Reagan Upon 18 Signing S. 1200, Nov. 10, 1986, reprinted in 1986 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5856-1, 5856-1.

19 A primary goal of IRCA was to reduce the economic incentives for employers to 20 hire undocumented workers. One way in which IRCA sought to achieve this goal was to 21 impose a graduated series of civil and criminal sanctions on employers who knowingly 22 employ undocumented workers. See 8 U.S.C. § 1324a(e)-(f). Congress also believed, 23 however, that it was important to allocate funds to vigorous enforcement of labor 24 standards in workplaces where undocumented workers were employed. IRCA, Pub. L.
25 No. 99-603 § 111(d) (appropriating funds for enforcement activities of Department of 26 Labor’s Wage and Hour Division to “deter the employment of unauthorized [immigrants] 27 and remove the economic incentive for employers to exploit and use such 28 [immigrants]”). Congress made clear that it was also not displacing state and federal 1 power “to remedy unfair practices committed against undocumented employees for . . .

2 engaging in [protected] activit[y].” H.R. Rep. No. 99-682, pt. 2, at 8-9 (1986).

3 An empirical analysis of IRCA’s legislative history by an amicus confirms that 4 labor concerns were at the center of the debate. See Kati L. Griffith, When Federal 5 Immigration Exclusion Meets Subfederal Workplace Inclusion: A Forensic Approach to 6 Legislative History, 17 N.Y.U. J. Legis. & Pub. Pol’y 881, 909-14 (2014) (finding that a 7 “systematic review of IRCA’s legislative history supports the . . . view that labor 8 concerns were a main tenet of IRCA’s purposes”). Legislators had concerns about the 9 impact of unauthorized migration on authorized workers as well as about the treatment of 10 unauthorized workers. Id. They “more often than not linked the treatment of unauthorized 11 workers with their concern for authorized workers,” id. at 910, noting the harmful effects 12 of the existence of an “exploitable underclass . . . fearful of reporting job-related abuse 13 and who have virtually nowhere to turn,” id. at 915 (quoting S. Rep. No. 99-132, at 108 14 (1985)).

15 Consistent with this understanding, when designing the federal scheme, Congress 16 deliberately chose not to impose additional penalties on workers for unauthorized work 17 or commit to unyielding enforcement of the immigration laws against workers.
18 Congress’s decision not to impose criminal penalties on undocumented workers 19 “reflect[ed] a considered judgment that making criminals out of [noncitizens] . . . who 20 already face the possibility of employer exploitation because of their removable status” 21 would exacerbate their weak bargaining position and “be inconsistent with federal policy 22 and objectives.” Arizona, 567 U.S. at 405. Congress also made the federal scheme 23 versatile, allowing for the exercise of prosecutorial discretion to accommodate, among 24 other interests, the legislative goals of IRCA. See Amicus Brief of the United States in 25 Puente Ariz. v. Arpaio, Nos. 15-15211, 15-15213, 15-215, 2016 WL 1181917, at *19 (9th 26 Cir. filed Mar. 2, 2016).¹ Finally, Congress limited the uses to which the new system of

27
28 ¹ For example, in 2011, the Department of Homeland Security entered into a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with the U.S. Department of Labor to reduce the

1 employment verification could be put, to prevent the verification system from being 2 utilized as a “paper trail . . . for the purpose of apprehending undocumented 3 [immigrants].” Puente Ariz. v. Arpaio, No. CV-14-01356-PHX-DGC, 2017 WL 1133012, 4 at *6-8 (D. Ariz. Mar. 27, 2017) (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 99-682, pt. 1, at 8-9 (1986)).

5 Congress intended through IRCA to “balance[] specifically chosen measures 6 discouraging illegal employment with measures to protect those who might be adversely 7 affected.” Nat’l Ctr. for Immigrants’ Rights, 913 F.2d at 1366. Congress adopted this 8 approach in lieu of a “massive increase[] in enforcement—in neighborhoods and work 9 places,” an approach legislators believed would be unacceptably “intrusive[.]” S. Rep.
10 No. 99-132, at 8 (1985); see also H.R. Rep. No. 99-682, pt. 1, at 46 (1986) (employer 11 sanctions “most humane, credible and effective way to respond”). IRCA is a “political 12 compromise . . . at every level.” Nat’l Ctr. for Immigrants’ Rights, 913 F.2d at 1366.

13 II. AB 450 Is Not Conflict Preempted

14 AB 450 was enacted to promote the health, safety, and well-being of workers, 15 particularly those at the margins of the economy. In this way, its provisions can be 16 harmonized with the objectives of IRCA. Moreover, because AB 450 is an exercise of 17 California’s historic police powers, the Court should hesitate to disturb it. See Rice v.
18 Santa Fe Elevator Corp., 331 U.S. 218, 230 (1947). Even if the Court finds some tension 19

20 risk that unscrupulous employers could inappropriately use immigration enforcement to 21 undermine efforts to enforce labor standards. Revised Memorandum of Understanding 22 Between the Departments of Homeland Security and Labor Concerning Enforcement
23 Activities at Worksites (Dec. 7, 2017), https://www.dol.gov/asp/media/reports/DHS-
24 DOL-MOU.pdf. A separate memorandum from 2011 provided that immigrants engaged in 25 a protected activity to vindicate labor rights or who “may be in a non-frivolous dispute 26 with an employer” would be considered for the favorable exercise of prosecutorial 27 discretion. Memorandum of John Morton, Dir., U.S. Immigration and Customs 28 Enforcement on Prosecutorial Discretion: Certain Victims, Witnesses, and Plaintiffs (June 17, 2011), <https://www.ice.gov/doclib/secure-communities/pdf/domestic-violence.pdf>.
That memorandum has been revoked by the current administration. Memorandum of John Kelly, Sec’y, U.S. Dep’t of Homeland Security, Enforcement of the Immigration Laws to Serve the National Interest 2 (Feb. 20, 2017),
https://www.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/publications/17_0220_S1_Enforcement-of-the-
Immigration-Laws-to-Serve-the-National-Interest.pdf (rescinding all prior existing conflicting directives, memoranda or field guidance re: prosecutorial discretion).

1 between AB 450 and federal law, that is not a sufficient basis to invalidate the measure.
2 Silkwood v. Kerr-McGee Corp., 464 U.S. 238, 256 (1984); In re Baker & Drake, 35 F.3d 3 at 1354 (conflict preemption requires more than showing that state law makes realization 4 of federal objectives “more difficult”). Rather, the United States must show that AB 450
5 actually obstructs the legislative purposes of IRCA. See Arizona, 567 U.S. at 399-400; 6 Goldstein, 412 U.S. at 554 (preemption only available in “those situations where 7 conflicts will necessarily arise”); Total TV v. Palmer Commc’ns, Inc., 69 F.3d 298, 304 8 (9th Cir.1995) (“hypothetical conflict is not a sufficient basis for preemption”). Because 9 the United States has not demonstrated that AB 450 obstructs the operation of federal law 10 or IRCA’s purposes, its preemption challenge should fail.

11 A. AB 450’s Purpose Is to Ensure Workers Are Aware of Their Rights
12 and Feel Safe Exercising Them

13 AB 450’s purpose is “to ensure that all California workers, regardless of 14 immigration status, enjoy the protections afforded them under state law[.]” Assembly 15 Committee on Appropriations, Analysis of AB 450 (May 17, 2017), Request for Judicial 16 Notice (“RJN”) Ex. I, ECF No. 78. When enacting AB 450, legislators were aware that 17 California law extends labor protections, rights and remedies to all workers in the State, 18 regardless of immigration status. See Senate Committee on Labor and Industrial 19 Relations, Analysis of AB 450 (June 28, 3017), RJN Ex. J. At the time, California law 20 also prohibited employers from engaging in unfair immigration-related practices, such as 21 contacting immigration authorities about workers in retaliation for exercising their labor 22 rights or re-verifying their employment authorization. Cal. Lab. Code §§ 1019-1019.1.
23 Concerned about reports of recent worksite immigration round-ups and their impact on 24 undocumented workers’ practical ability to enforce their labor rights, California sought to 25 fortify its regime by introducing greater parity in the relationship between employers and 26 employees when dealing with immigration authorities and ensuring that “affected 27 workers . . . [are] cognizant of their rights during [federal enforcement] actions.”
28 Assembly Committee on Appropriations, Analysis of AB 450, RJN Ex. I.

1 It is not a new revelation that the specter of immigration enforcement against 2 workers can severely undercut the integrity of labor and employment laws. As one of the 3 amici has explained, undocumented workers “play an important role [as private attorneys 4 general] in the furtherance of substantive legal norms and societal values.” Kathleen 5 Kim, The Trafficked Worker as Private Attorney General: A Model for Enforcing the 6 Civil Rights of Undocumented Workers, 2009 U. Chi. Legal F. 247, 300-04 (2009)
7 (describing cases in which undocumented workers have come forward to report 8 violations of workplace laws to the benefit of the broader public). Courts have recognized 9 the in terrorem effect that the exposure to immigration enforcement action can have on 10 noncitizen workers’ willingness to play this role. See, e.g., Rivera v. NIBCO, Inc., 364 11 F.3d 1057, 1064-66 (9th Cir. 2004) (upholding protective order prohibiting discovery 12 into plaintiffs’ immigration status on grounds that such discovery would undermine the 13 “public interest in enforcing Title VII and [the California Fair Employment and Housing 14 Act]”); Does I thru XXIII v. Advanced Textile Corp., 214 F.3d 1058, 1068-69, 1073 (9th 15 Cir. 2000) (permitting plaintiffs to proceed anonymously and recognizing the public 16 interest in plaintiffs enforcing their statutory rights). Nevertheless, recent shifts in federal 17 policy have increased the vulnerability of undocumented workers at the workplace.²
18 Reports of retaliation by employers against workers on the basis of their immigration 19 status are on the rise.³ In enacting AB 450, California has attempted to alleviate some of 20 the in terrorem effect of worksite immigration operations and reduce the ability of 21 employers to use immigration enforcement as a tool for retaliation by working within the 22 confines of the law to insist that employers not affirmatively facilitate the arrest and 23 detention of their employees while they are at work.

1 B. California Possesses Expansive Authority to Regulate the Employment
2 Relationship to Protect Workers

3 As the Supreme Court observed before the enactment of IRCA in DeCanas v.
4 Bica, 424 U.S. 351 (1976), there is a strong tradition of states acting within their police 5 powers to “regulate the employment relationship to protect workers within the state.” Id.
6 at 356. California’s “interest in reducing immigration status effects on state [] workplace 7 protections undoubtedly emanates” from these historic police powers. Kati L. Griffith, 8 The Power of a Presumption: California as a Laboratory for Unauthorized Immigrant 9 Workers’ Rights, 50 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1279, 1295-96 (2017) (considering preemption 10 dimensions of California measures that seek to protect unauthorized immigrant workers, 11 among others). In preemption cases, courts “start with the assumption that the historic 12 police powers of the States were not to be superseded by the Federal Act unless that was 13 the clear and manifest purpose of Congress.” Medtronic, Inc. v. Lohr, 518 U.S. 470, 485 14 (1996) (quoting Rice, 331 U.S. at 230). This is particularly true where, as here, the 15 “field” at issue is one “which the States have traditionally occupied.” Id.

16 Even after the passage of IRCA, numerous courts have rejected the claim that 17 federal law preempts state labor and employment laws that offer protections to 18 unauthorized workers. See Griffith, A Forensic Approach to Legislative History, at 890 19 (identifying 21 cases where judges did not find any conflict between subfederal 20 workplace protections and IRCA). For example, in Salas v. Sierra Chemical Co., 59 Cal.
21 4th 407 (2014), the California Supreme Court upheld a state statute extending employee 22 protections to unauthorized workers, including lost pay compensation for the period 23 predating an employer’s discovery of an employee’s ineligibility to work. Addressing the 24 issue of obstacle preemption, the court found that permitting unauthorized workers to 25 enjoy the protections of state law was in keeping with IRCA’s purpose of “eliminating 26 employers’ economic incentives to hire such workers.” Id. at 425-26 (citing Sure-Tan, 27 Inc. v. NLRB, 467 U.S.884 (1984)). In the court’s judgment, “[i]t would frustrate rather 28 than advance the policies underlying federal immigration law to leave unauthorized

1 workers so bereft of state labor law protections that employers have a strong incentive to 2 ‘look the other way’ and exploit a black market for illegal labor.” Id. at 426.

3 In the workers’ compensation context, “courts have exhaustively discussed the 4 interplay of their jurisdiction’s workers’ compensation laws and IRCA” and found, based 5 on similar reasoning, that IRCA does not bar unauthorized workers from receiving 6 benefits. Del. Valley Field Servs. v. Ramirez, 105 A.3d 396, 405 (Del. Super. Ct. 2012), 7 aff’d sub nom. Del. Valley Field Servs. v. Melgar-Ramirez, 61 A.3d 617 (Del. 2013). The 8 Minnesota Supreme Court thus observed that compliance with a workers’ compensation 9 anti-retaliation statute would not obstruct federal law since “IRCA is premised on the 10 conclusion that ‘[e]mployment is the magnet that attracts [immigrants] here illegally’” 11 and “enforcing labor laws . . . furthers . . . IRCA’s goal of discouraging employers from 12 hiring unauthorized [immigrants].” Sanchez v. Dahlke Trailer Sales, Inc., 897 N.W.2d 13 267, 277 (Minn. 2017) (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 99-682, pt. 1, at 46 (1986)) (emphasis in 14 original). Similarly, Delaware Superior Court explained in Ramirez, workers’ 15 compensation or other labor and employment protections could not be considered 16 prohibited “sanction[s]” under 8 U.S.C. § 1324a(h)(2) simply because they extended to 17 undocumented workers. Ramirez, 105 A.3d at 406.⁴

18 In sum, courts are hesitant to find that state laws protecting workers are preempted 19 by IRCA, even where they apply to or are specifically designed to protect undocumented 20 workers. See Grocers Supply, Inc. v. Cabello, 390 S.W.3d 707, 718-24 (Tex. App. 2012) 21 (“To conclude otherwise . . . would be a ‘freewheeling’ judicial inquiry that would 22 undercut the principle that it is Congress . . . that preempts state law.”) (quoting Chamber 23 of Commerce v. Whiting, 563 U.S. 582, 607 (2011)). The main situations in which courts 24 have found state action to be in conflict with IRCA have involved employee

25 ⁴ According to the court, “[t]o construe [the statute] . . . otherwise” would have 26 absurd results, precluding “state and local officials [from even] being [able to impose 27 even a traffic fine upon a person who has employed an undocumented [immigrant].” Id.
28 For a penalty “to fall within the purview of § 1324a(h)(2), the benefits must have been awarded . . . as a means of penalizing employers for employing [undocumented immigrants].” Id. (emphasis in original).

1 reinstatement or lost pay compensation for the period after an employer has discovered a 2 worker's unauthorized status, see Griffith, A Forensic Approach to Legislative History, at 3 889; Michael J. Wishnie, Emerging Issues for Undocumented Workers, 6 U. Pa. J. Lab. & 4 Emp. L. 497, 505 (2004), or state law attempts to impose penalties on workers for 5 unauthorized work, see Arizona, 567 U.S. at 402-06.

6 There is another reason why state and local efforts to protect undocumented 7 workers should be given special solicitude on a preemption challenge. As an amicus has 8 argued, the "employee-protective purpose" of local laws that extend to immigrant 9 workers "should restrain courts from deciding that federal law preempts local laws[.]" 10 Catherine Fisk, The Anti-Subordination Principle of Labor and Employment Law
11 Preemption, 5 Harv. L. & Pol'y Rev. 17, 19 (2011). This is because IRCA does not 12 operate in a vacuum, but against a backdrop of protective labor legislation, including at 13 the federal level. Thus, any preemption analysis should consider not only federal 14 immigration law, but the policies reflected in federal labor law as well. Id. at 625-27.

15 C. AB 450 Does Not Pose an Obstacle to IRCA

16 1. IRCA Provides Immigration Authorities with a Comprehensive Set 17 of Investigatory Tools and Does Not Rely on Voluntary Access to Implement the Federal Scheme

18 In its motion, the United States makes an unsupported claim that Congress 19 designed a federal scheme for immigration enforcement, "including in the context of 20 worksite inspections, that is premised on the private property owner's ability to consent 21 to inspections of their property and employee records." PI Motion at 11-12 (emphasis 22 added). There is a vast difference between stating that immigration agents are permitted 23 to rely on consent to access private property and records and suggesting that the federal 24 scheme needs or is based on such consent. A closer examination of the federal scheme 25 reveals that voluntary consent is in fact not necessary; Congress's full intent can be 26 realized through the many tools that immigration authorities have been given.

27 As discussed above, IRCA's primary regulatory focus was on employers, not 28 employees. With respect to employers, IRCA requires employers to verify the 1 employment eligibility of employees and to maintain a record of the Form I-9 and related 2 documents for a specified period of time. See, e.g., 8 C.F.R. § 274.2. When federal 3 authorities conduct an inspection, they typically do so by serving a Notice of Inspection 4 (NOI).⁵ AB 450 contains no restriction on employers providing I-9 and other documents 5 in response to a NOI—in fact, AB 450 specifically exempts such documents from its 6 subpoena or warrant requirement. Cal. Gov’t Code § 7285.2(a)(2). AB 450 simply 7 requires employers to provide notice to employees of a NOI—something that employers 8 have always been authorized to do—and provide employees for whom a deficiency has 9 been identified an opportunity to correct the deficiency. Cal. Lab. Code § 90.2.⁶

10 When immigration authorities need to conduct an inspection of a place of business 11 unrelated to I-9 documents and without prior notice, they may seek a subpoena or 12 warrant. The United States claims that the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA)
13 provides no procedure for procuring a judicial warrant, PI Motion at 13, but federal law 14 actually does allow immigration authorities to obtain a judicial warrant for a worksite 15 operation. In fact, to obtain a warrant, immigration authorities need not even meet the 16 relatively more stringent requirements for obtaining a search warrant in the criminal law 17 context. They can obtain a judicial warrant by meeting a more relaxed “hybrid standard 18 of probable cause.” Int’l Molders’ Allied Workers’ Local Union No. 164 v. Nelson, 799 19 F.2d 547, 552 (9th Cir. 1986) (describing standard for “Blackie’s warrant”). In the main 20 case cited by the United States for the proposition that immigration authorities should be 21 able to obtain unfettered access to worksites without a warrant, the INS had a warrant.
22 See I.N.S. v. Delgado, 466 U.S. 210, 212 (1984) (stating that worksite surveys INS

23 ⁵ I-9 Central: Inspections, U.S. Citizenship & Immigration Services, 24 <https://www.uscis.gov/i-9-central/retain-store-form-i-9/inspection/inspections> (last 25 visited May 14, 2018). Alternatively, they may utilize subpoenas or warrants to inspect documents without providing three-days notice. Id.

26 ⁶ With respect to employees for whom a deficiency has been identified, ICE 27 already instructs employers to provide them with notice and an opportunity to respond.
28 See Form I-9 Inspection Process, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (Jan. 8, 2018), <https://www.ice.gov/factsheets/i9-inspection> (“The employer should provide the employee with a copy of the notice, and give the employee an opportunity to present ICE with additional documentation to establish their work eligibility.”).

1 conducted in January and September 1977 were conducted “pursuant to two warrants”).
2 That federal authorities would prefer not to have to make the necessary showing to get a 3 warrant before descending upon a business is unsurprising. But there is no doubt that 4 they can obtain warrants with relative ease.

5 2. Limiting Voluntary Access Will Help Ensure Bona Fide
6 Investigations and Reduce Retaliation

7 The United States appears to be less concerned with AB 450’s impact on its ability 8 to investigate employers and more concerned with maximizing its ability to enter 9 worksites so that it can engage in routine immigration enforcement against workers. PI 10 Motion at 11-12 (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1357 and citing Delgado and Zepeda, both pre-IRCA 11 cases). Those activities fall under a different part of the INA that regulates immigration 12 officers and agents, not employers or their employees. See, e.g., 8 U.S.C. § 1357.

13 When immigration authorities enter workplaces to apprehend workers, they 14 sometimes do so with non-judicial administrative warrants or no warrant at all. Unlike a 15 judicial warrant, an administrative warrant does not authorize immigration officials to 16 enter non-public parts of a business. See, e.g., ICE Administrative Removal Warrants
17 (MP3), Fed. Law Enforcement Training Ctr., https://www.fletc.gov/audio/ice- 18 administrative-removal-warrants-mp3 (last visited May 15, 2018) (“primary difference” 19 between criminal warrant and administration warrant “is that, unlike a criminal warrant . .
20 ., a removal warrant does not authorize the ICE officer to enter . . . an REP [reasonable 21 expectation of privacy] area to execute the warrant”). However, administrative warrants 22 can be confused with criminal warrants. AB 450 helps to ensure that employers do not 23 provide voluntary access to authorities in the mistaken belief that an administrative 24 warrant authorizes them to enter nonpublic areas of a business.

25 When immigration officials have no warrant, commentators have observed that 26 the consent doctrine may be “insufficiently protective” because individuals from whom 27 consent is sought, such as the front desk clerk at a business, may lack knowledge of the 28 ability to refuse the request. Bernard Bell, United States v. California: A Preliminary

1 Assessment of the Challenge to California’s “Immigrant Worker Protection Act,” Yale J.
2 on Reg. Notice & Comment Blog (Mar. 31, 2018), http://yalejreg.com/nc/united-states-v-
3 california-a-preliminary-assessment-of-the-challenge-to-californias-immigrant-worker- 4 protection-act-by-bernard-w-bell/. “Consent doctrine is even more problematic [where, as 5 here] the person who consents is not the target of the search.” Id. (citing Illinois v.
6 Rodriguez, 497 U.S. 177, 181, 186 (1990) and United States v. Matlock, 415 U.S. 164, 7 171 (1974)). Employers “may have no interest in ensuring that the government has an 8 adequate justification for conducting a search . . . confident that any untoward effects will 9 not be directed at the company.” Id.

10 By extending its protections to all “places of labor,”⁷ AB 450 benefits some of the 11 most vulnerable workers in the state, i.e., those whose employers would not otherwise be 12 aware of their procedural rights or be inclined to exercise them.⁸ It ensures that 13 investigations by immigration authorities have adequate justification and reduces the in 14 terrorem effect of exploitative or haphazard immigration enforcement on the 15 enforcement of labor and employment laws in the state.

16 III. AB 450 Is Not Barred by the Intergovernmental Immunity Doctrine

17 The United States also argues that AB 450 violates the doctrine of 18 intergovernmental immunity. PI Motion at 14-18. This Court should decline the United 19 States’ invitation to expand intergovernmental immunity beyond conventional 20 understandings of its reach.

21
23 ⁷ The United States suggests that “places of labor” could be read to include 24 locations within 25 miles of the international border, where immigration authorities can 25 have access to “private lands, but not dwellings, for the purpose of patrolling the border,” 26 or locations that authorities must be able to enter in the event of exigent circumstances.
27 ECF No. 2-1 at 14 n.8. But in both of those cases, authorities need neither a warrant nor 28 “voluntary consent” to enter. Cal. Gov’t Code § 7285.1(a). AB 450 is therefore irrelevant.

⁸ The United States’ argument that AB 450 will impede investigations into human smuggling or trafficking, PI Motion at 16-17, is misplaced. Those involved in smuggling or trafficking are unlikely to consent to a search even without AB 450, and to the extent that authorities learn of criminal activity, they may enter private property with a search warrant.

1 In the modern era, “[t]he Court has . . . adopted a functional approach to claims of 2 governmental immunity, accommodating of the full range of each sovereign’s legislative 3 authority and respectful of the primary role of Congress in resolving conflicts between 4 the National and State governments.” North Dakota v. United States, 495 U.S. 423, 435
5 (1990). The federal government can assert immunity only from regulation that 6 discriminates against the federal government directly or, in the case of contractors or 7 suppliers, indirectly through those “with whom [the federal government] deals.” Id. at 8 435-38. AB 450 plainly does not regulate the federal government directly. Cf. United 9 States v. City of Arcata, 629 F.3d 986 (9th Cir. 2009). AB 450 also does not regulate the 10 federal government indirectly. Employers subject to AB 450 are not being regulated 11 because of their status as government contractors or suppliers, North Dakota, 495 U.S. at 12 438; they are being regulated because of California’s desire to improve the condition of 13 all workers, which necessarily implicates all employers in the state. Cf. Boeing Co. v.
14 Movassaghi, 768 F.3d 832 (9th Cir. 2014).⁹

15 “Claims to any further degree of immunity must be resolved under principles of 16 congressional pre-emption.” North Dakota, 495 U.S. at 435. That is because it is 17 Congress, not the courts, that plays the “primary role” in deciding whether the 18 accomplishment of federal purposes requires displacing state law today. Id.; Gillian E.
19 Metzger, Federalism and Federal Agency Reform, 111 Colum. L. Rev. 1, 57 (2011)
20 (“Much of the resultant doctrine of federal intergovernmental immunity has been cut 21 back over time, with such concerns now addressed largely under the aegis of 22 preemption.”). Since Congress was well aware of how to preempt state law and chose not 23

24 ⁹ The United States suggests that employers subject to AB 450 are like the 25 contractor in Boeing Co. because AB 450 “imposes penalties on private employers . . . to 26 the extent they voluntarily cooperate with the United States,” and therefore, 27 intergovernmental immunity should extend to them. PI Motion at 14-15. But AB 450 28 clearly applies to all employers. Compliance with AB 450 imposes no special hardship on them. Even those who would prefer not to follow AB 450 cannot be compared to government contractors or suppliers because, unlike contractors or suppliers, they have no legal relationship to or obligation to perform functions for the federal government absent a NOI, subpoena, or warrant.

1 to do so here, no further elaboration of the implications of the Supremacy Clause is 2 necessary. See generally Lawrence Tribe, Intergovernmental Immunities in Litigation, 3 Taxation and Regulation: Separation of Powers Issues in Controversies about 4 Federalism, 89 Harv. L. Rev. 682, 682, 701-11 (1976) (expressing doubt about judicial 5 branch’s ability to determine when a tax or regulation is “really” a burden on a federal 6 instrumentality and calling for “attention to the question of who should decide”—to 7 which he answers: Congress).

8 CONCLUSION

9 AB 450 was crafted to promote the well-being of workers in California without 10 conflicting with federal law. Amici urge the Court to decline the United States’ request 11 for a preliminary injunction.
