IDENTITY AND INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

Amicus curiae Anti-Defamation League ("ADL") is a non-profit organization that fights anti-Semitism and all forms of bigotry, defends democratic ideals, and protects civil rights for all. ADL has regional offices across the country, including five offices in California.

ADL is a leading organization in preventing and responding to hate crimes, having drafted the nation's first model hate crime law and having led a large coalition advocating for the passage of the federal Matthew Shepard and James Byrd, Jr. Hate Crimes Prevention Act. ADL has also been recognized as a leading resource on effective responses to violent bigotry and building bridges of communication, understanding, and respect among diverse communities. To support those aims, ADL trains law enforcement on issues including hate crimes and implicit bias.

ADL is uniquely situated to assist the Court in evaluating the United States' requested preliminary injunction. Specifically, ADL can provide perspective on the likely suppressive effect of the injunction on the reporting and prevention of crimes, including hate crimes. ADL's arguments thus further demonstrate, beyond the parties' briefing, why this Court should deny the preliminary injunction.

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 29(a)(4)(E), ADL states that no party's counsel authored this brief in whole or in part, and no party, party's counsel, or other person contributed money intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief.

I. INTRODUCTION

The preliminary injunction that the United States seeks is not only unconstitutional, but deliberately seeks to undo the protections that California law provides to its most vulnerable communities and residents. Enjoining the provisions of California's duly enacted Senate Bill 54 ("SB 54"), Assembly Bill 450 ("AB 450"), and Assembly Bill 103 ("AB 103") – as the United States requests – would force California to set aside critical protections designed to build trust and cooperation between law enforcement officials and immigrant and minority communities. The resulting erosion of trust between police and citizens would leave a large segment of the population more vulnerable to crimes, especially hate crimes. Indeed, the effects of the injunction would be felt most acutely by those members of society most in need of protection.

California's laws are carefully crafted to comply with federal immigration law, yet at the same time guarantee that citizens are not deterred from reporting crimes or otherwise engaging with local law enforcement because of fears that the authorities will question their immigration status. The goal is to ensure that local law enforcement is focused on deterring and responding to crimes rather than on whether the victim, witness, or offender is an immigrant. In addition to conserving limited resources, California's statutes are thus designed to assist local law enforcement – i.e., to advance police-community relations and encourage community members to come forward to report crimes, and turn to police for protection without the fear that their immigration or citizenship status will subject them to legal action themselves.

As California officials and law enforcement leaders around the nation have attested, there is a demonstrable risk that both documented and undocumented immigrants would be dissuaded from engaging with local enforcement efforts, including efforts to combat hate crime, if the requested injunction is entered. In the wake of the anti-immigrant rhetoric and policies advocated by the current Administration, members of immigrant groups already justifiably fear that the police will report their immigration information – or that of a family member or friend – to Immigration and Customs Enforcement ("ICE"), thereby resulting in detention and/or deportation. As a consequence, many individuals are avoiding contact with law enforcement, causing immediate irreparable harm to communities in California and across the country.

In the experience of ADL, this break-down of trust and cooperation between police and minority communities leaves communities more vulnerable to hate crimes. Moreover, the resulting lawlessness compromises the safety of all citizens and residents, as the elimination of trust in local law enforcement makes it much harder for law enforcement to get the information they need from immigrant communities to prevent crime, including in particular hate crime. Accordingly, ADL submits this amicus brief in support of California and urges this Court to deny the United States' request for a preliminary injunction. Only denial of the injunction can prevent the immediate and irreparable harm that will otherwise ensue from the consequent erosion of trust and cooperation between immigrant communities and law enforcement.

II. ARGUMENT

A. The California Statutes at Issue Are Aimed at Protecting Victims and Witnesses of Crimes.

Contrary to the United States' assertions, the California laws at issue were not "intended to uniquely impede the enforcement of the immigration laws" (Plaintiff's Motion for a Preliminary Injunction at 32); rather, they were enacted to secure the enforcement of state criminal law, in particular by encouraging victims and witnesses to come forward and report crime, and to protect the rights of vulnerable communities in California.

Specifically, SB 54 was enacted to facilitate the reporting of crimes and strengthen community policing efforts by defining when law enforcement agencies ("LEAs") may use their resources to assist the federal government with immigration enforcement. See Cal. Gov't Code § 7284.6. AB 450 was enacted to protect the privacy rights of California workers when the federal government seeks to conduct inspections. See Cal. Gov't Code §§ 7285.1, 7285.2; Cal. Lab. Code §§ 90.2, 1019.2. And, AB 103 was enacted to protect the welfare and due process rights of those detained in California for civil immigration-enforcement purposes. See Cal. Gov't Code § 12532. These statutes are designed to build trust between LEAs and immigrant communities in California by eliminating the fear that any interaction with law enforcement will inevitably lead to deportation, while also allowing LEAs to engage with federal immigration enforcement when serious crime is at issue. Moreover, they help protect the safety, well-being, and rights of all people in California.

The statutes, along with other policies and statutes in California, are thus expressly aimed at fostering cooperation and communication between law enforcement and the public. This is the cornerstone of "community policing," which is based on forging partnerships between law enforcement and community members and groups. The U.S. Department of Justice itself has affirmed that the value of community policing efforts depends in the first instance on establishing trust between the community and law enforcement, because "[c]itizens who do not trust the police are less likely to report crime and participate in developing solutions to problems." A critical element of developing this trust – and the animating purpose behind the adoption of the state laws that the United States now challenges – is creating an environment in which both victims and witnesses are willing to come forward and actively participate in criminal investigations. California's protective statutes are designed to do just that, i.e., to encourage community members - regardless of their immigration or citizenship status - to contact and cooperate with local police without fear of deportation or other immigration consequences. Public safety throughout this nation depends on all community members having this trust.

B. The United States' Requested Injunction Suppresses Reporting of Crimes and Compromises Community Safety.

If the Court grants the United States' motion for a preliminary injunction, the California statutes would be dead letters, and the community safety and trust that California has fostered over decades of community policing would be replaced by suspicion and fear. By undermining critical protective statutes and coercing local law enforcement agencies to enforce a federal immigration program, the requested injunction would drive a wedge between police officers and the residents they protect. Immigrants and members of communities with large immigrant anxieties, and thus already changed the landscape of the community's interaction with law enforcement. Since last year, there has been decreased crime reporting in the Latino community. ⁵ For example, in Houston and Los Angeles, rape reports by Latinos went down by 42.8 and 25 percent, respectively, from 2016. ⁶ Reports of spousal abuse by Latino victims have declined by 18, 13, and 3.5 percent in San Francisco, San Diego, and Los Angeles, respectively, as compared to 2016, while reporting among non-Latinos has remained the same. ⁷ The decline in reports of sexual assault, in particular, has led to increased difficultly in investigating and prosecuting domestic violence. ⁸ In a 2017 survey of law enforcement personnel across the country, officers reported a "decline in cooperation and a rise in fear of law enforcement" among immigrant communities. ⁹ This decline in cooperation "is leading to increased recidivism by perpetrators of a range of crimes in their communities, including domestic and sexual violence crimes." ¹⁰ The overall effect of enjoining California's protective statutes would not be a reduction in crime, but rather an increase in crime, as the necessary trust and cooperation between the police and local communities is reduced.

Moreover, contrary to the United States' assertions, there is demonstrable evidence that "sanctuary" policies, such as the policies that animate the statutes at issue, reduce crime. For example, one study completed in early 2017 compared counties with a "sanctuary" policy $-i.e.$, counties that do not assist federal immigration enforcement officials by holding people in 6	percent said they are less likely to report a crime they witnessed, and 42.9 percent said they are to, a model statute drafted by ADL. 14 The landmark Matthew Shepard and James Byrd Jr. Hate Crimes Prevention Act of 2009 ("HCPA") created a new federal law which criminalizes willfull causing bodily injury when the crime was committed because of the actual or perceived race, color, religion, or national origin of the victim, or the crime was committed because of actual or perceived religion, national origin, gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, or disability, and the crime affected interstate or foreign commerce or occurred within federal special maritime and territorial jurisdiction. 18 U.S.C. § 249(a). The purpose of the HCPA is to create more effective response to and prevention of hate crimes, which "are disturbingly prevalent, [] pose a significant threat to the full participation of all Americans in our democratic society," and "are significantly under-reported." ¹⁵ This Congressional commitment to protecting the most vulnerable communities in our society will be directly undermined, and irreparably harmed, by enjoining the California statutes at issue.

ADL has closely monitored and exposed the increasingly hateful anti-immigrant, anti-Latino, and anti-Muslim rhetoric that has surrounded the national debate on immigration reform. ¹⁶ During the period since the 2016 presidential election, individuals have reported increased hate incidents and hate crimes targeting Latinos based on perceived immigration status. ¹⁷ Indeed, studies have shown that reported hate crimes have been on the rise. ¹⁸ For
