ABOUT US

Note from Herbert Adderley and Bernard Parrish

This website was created to inform former football players, fans and supporters of the plight of retired players who have been shunned by the organizations who claim to be acting in their best interest.

Our first step in ensuring that the mistreatment of our retired colleagues stops has been to file a class-action lawsuit. We encourage you to read the lawsuit document [internal link] so that you understand the nature of our complaints.

The second step is to make sure that everyone – former players, fans and supporters – come together to support this important cause. Please join our cause [internal link] or contact us [internal link] if you have any questions.

Thank you,

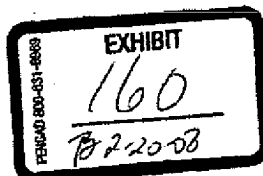

Herb & Bernie

Players for Justice

The goal of Retired Pro Football Players for Justice is to provide an organized voice to all retired NFL players on issues such as royalties, pensions and disability payments. It will engage in activities like bringing class action lawsuits, testifying before Congress, and providing information to the media highlighting the situation of those whose former physically demanding careers have resulted in long-term damage to their health. The hard work that a professional football player puts in to rise to the highest athletic level should result in post-career benefits equivalent to those in any high-achieving job. Unfortunately, that is not the case and it is a problem which we will vigorously attack.
