He is going to be in higher demand these days. Aim for an earn out method of valuation. What is his current margin?

Hello Shai,

As I mentioned yesterday, I spoke with the CFO of TomorrowNow to get a feel for management's view on an acceptable valuation range for the Company. They believe that the appropriate value of the Company is somewhere between 2.5 and 3 times projected 2005 revenues, which are expected to grow from $2.6 million this year to approximately $6 million next year. This places management's value of the Company between $15 and $18 million, a multiple of 5.8 and 6.9 times 2004 revenues. The CFO believes the Company can demonstrate a strong pipeline of deals and that the $6 million in revenues is modest, he also noted the expanded support services the Company only began providing late this year. He did state that the Company would consider an earn-out arrangement to address the execution risk of not achieving the goal, but noted that getting a deal done using any reasonable multiple on current revenue would be very difficult.

Best regards,
Arlen

Remember the PR value of buying them and starting from a base of companies that get service from us. The bragging rights for having more PSFT customers under service than Oracle may be all we need for momentum swing....

Shai,

The typical service business sells between 0.8 and 1.2 times revenue. Because of the rapid growth and market prospects for the Company, we will need to pay a premium to the market. At 1.2 times revenue, the business is valued at $3.1 million and at 3 times revenue, $7.8 million. We are starting to put together an valuation model, but we expect that much more than 2 times revenue ($5.1 million) will be close to the top of our range. We expect to have a preliminary discussion with the CEO of TomorrowNow later this evening to get a better feel for the Company's expected valuation range.

Best regards,
 Arlen

Did we get a ball park figure for their expected value?
