To follow-up on my email below, for ease of future reference we are producing the same files attache my email sent this morning as ORCLX-PIN-000086 to ORCLX-PIN-000097. This production is being hand-delivered to your San Francisco office, to the attention of Mr. McDonell. A copy of the productio letter is attached.

Subject: RE: Paul Pinto: counting utilities

Dear Jeff,

Although Plaintiffs disagree that Defendants are currently unable to fully examine Mr. Pinto's work, in spirit of cooperation and in anticipation that Defendants will extend the same general courtesy with the rebuttal reports, we are willing to provide you with the information requested below.

1. The exact machine environment (operating system) in which Mr. Pinto ran his counters is:

Computing Environment
Component	Product
Hardware	Personal Computer
Operating System	Microsoft Windows 2000/XP
Microsoft .Net Framework	.NET Framework Version 2.0 Redistributable Package
Data base	MS Access
Supporting Tools	MS office 2003, and MS Visio

2. We are also attaching the actual executables in a zip file containing two Utility files and ten Source Lines of Code (SLOC) counting files. Please treat this information as Confidential under the Stipulated Protective Order. The second table below correlates these executables to the parser code that was previously produced to Defendants at ORCLXPIN-000066 to ORCLX-PIN-000085.

Utility Files
File Name	Description
Insight.exe	Parser
RuleEditor.exe	Rules processing engine

SLOC Counting Files
File Name	Description	Reference Number
C and H.Summary.Repository 2.0.mdb	C and H Parsing Rules.pdf	ORCLX-PIN-000066

Subject: Paul Pinto: counting utilities

Dear Geoff:

In his report, Mr. Pinto states that he constructed various software utilities in order to count "the number of Logical Source Lines of Code for each different code base within each module" and that those utilities have been produced as ORCLXPIN-000066 to ORCLX-PIN-000085. In order to replicate Mr. Pinto's analysis, defendants' experts require more information than is provided in Mr. Pinto's report and supporting materials. Specifically, with respect to those counting utilities, it is not possible to fully examine Mr. Pinto's work and his results unless the experts are provided with the following information concerning the platform / environment in which he compiled and ran the utilities:

1. The exact machine environment (operating system) in which he ran his counters (e.g., was it a PC running "Windows XP SP2" or _____???)
2. The exact compiler by name and version that Mr. Pinto used to generate the executables (i.e., executable versions of his utilities).

We also ask that you please immediately produce to us (i) the actual executables that Mr. Pinto created for each of his various counters and (ii) his parser code and any objects that he generated / created with his parser.

Very truly yours,

Jeffrey M. Butler
