Here is the 2nd reply from Ameritrade

We understand your concern and frustration over the spam e-mail you've received, and we want you to know that we take your privacy and security seriously. We will continue to do all we can to protect both.

Our investigation into this issue is ongoing. We've recently expanded the directions in which we're investigating, and have doubled our efforts in both internal and external investigations. We're looking at our own systems, and working closely with our vendors to examine theirs.

We continue to make progress and work very hard at investigating this issue, but unfortunately we still don't have an update we can share with you at this time. We hope you understand that sharing details of exactly what we have learned so far can compromise the ongoing investigation.

Please be sure to delete any spam you might receive, then empty your e-mail's trash so that it's no longer kept there, either.

If you haven't lately, you might want to review the Security Center online, which has details about spam, and also about the Asset Protection Guarantee. It protects you if you lose cash or securities from your account due to unauthorized activity. If that happens, we can guarantee we'll reimburse you if you work with us in three ways: 1) keep your account information secure and confidential, 2) frequently check your account and report any suspicious activity to us immediately, and 3) take steps we request if your account is ever compromised.

We understand that this issue is a nuisance and that it's troubling. And we thank you for your cooperation and patience as we get to the bottom of it.

Cynical Translation: It looks bad, and Legal has gagged everyone involved.

Cynical Translation: Please don't retain any independent evidence.

Indeed. I suspect that they are not able to sweep this one under the carpet as easily as they did the other ones. Plus they are dealing with a more informed public, who has the access to create tagged email addresses.

One of the first excuses given to me on another instance of my tagged email getting out to stock spammers was that my email address was easy to guess. I will give them that, no problem, my mistake to believe that a corporation would protect my privacy and when they didn't they would blame me for it. So then I changed my email to something a lot harder to guess. I banged on the keyboard and came up with my new and improved email address. Then again, here comes the spam after a period of time.

Another reason Ameritrade can't dismiss me as easily is that I have my own mail logs. They can't say "dictionary attack" because I have the logs. Most users don't have that luxury at their hands, and to get the logs would take a court order and $$$$$.

It will be good to watch them wiggle on this one. I wonder if a media outlet would like to take this one on. I don't know, my faith in the media is so/so. I just need to remember to contact them every so often and see what the progress is and to send them the logs on my THREE previous ameritrade accounts that are still receiving stock spams. I do find it funny that they receive ONLY stock spams. It might be time to get the government involved in this one.
