UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

TRANS VIDEO ELECTRONICS, LTD., Plaintiff,
v.
SONY ELECTRONICS, INC., et al.,
Defendants.

No. C-09-3304 EMC

AMENDED ORDER DENYING PLAINTIFF’S MOTION TO AMEND
(Docket No. 136)

Plaintiff Trans Video Electronics, Ltd. initiated this patent infringement action against various Sony entities (collectively “Sony”) in July 2009. On May 18, 2011, Judge Patel issued a claim construction order in which she construed various terms contained in the only claim at issue, i.e., claim 3 of Patent No. 5,991,801 (the “‘801 patent”). See Docket No. 119 (order). Thereafter, the case was reassigned to the undersigned, and Sony moved for summary judgment. Sony argued that, based on Judge Patel’s claim construction, claim 3 was invalid based on a lack of written description. This Court granted Sony’s motion but did not enter judgment because, prior to the order granting summary judgment, Trans Video had filed a motion to amend. Currently pending before the Court is that motion in amend. In its motion, Trans Video asks for leave to add a new claim for patent infringement – more specifically, for infringement of claim 4 of the ‘801 patent. Having considered the parties’ briefs and accompanying submissions, as well as all other evidence of record, the Court hereby DENIES the motion to amend.

I. FACTUAL & PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

As noted above, Trans Video initiated this lawsuit in July 2009, asserting infringement of the ‘801 patent. See Docket No. 1 (complaint). On February 12, 2010, Sony moved to stay the case pending reexamination of the patent. See Docket No. 54 (motion). Approximately a month later, Judge Patel granted in part and denied in part Sony’s motion. More specifically, Judge Patel stayed the case but still allowed the parties to conduct discovery related to claim construction of the ‘801 patent. See Docket No. 66 (Order at 1). Almost a year later, on February 14, 2011, Judge Patel lifted the stay. See Docket No. 85 (civil pretrial minutes). The parties proceeded with claim construction on the only claim in the case, i.e., claim 3 of the ‘801 patent, and on May 18, 2011, Judge Patel issued her claim construction order. See Docket No. 119 (order).

Shortly thereafter, on June 6, 2011, the case was reassigned to this Court. See Docket No. 121 (order). In a joint case management conference (“CMC”) statement filed on June 21, 2011, the parties, including Trans Video, confirmed that the only claim at issue in the case was claim 3 of the ‘801 patent. See Docket No. 122 (St. at 3). On July 29, 2011, Sony filed its motion for summary judgment on invalidity based on lack of a written description. See Docket No. 124 (motion). Trans Video’s opposition to the summary judgment motion, filed on August 12, 2011, reiterated that the only claim at issue in the case was claim 3. See Docket No. 128 (Opp’n at 1) (stating that “Claim 3 [is] the only asserted claim in this action”). Sony thereafter filed its reply brief on August 19, 2011.

On September 12, 2011 – approximately two years after Trans Video first filed suit, almost a month after briefing on the summary judgment motion had been completed, and only a week and a half before the hearing on the summary judgment motion was to take place – Trans Video informed Sony for the first time that it wanted to add a new claim for patent infringement to the case. See Hanley Decl. ¶ 4. More specifically, Trans Video stated that it wanted to add a claim for infringement of claim 4 of the ‘801 patent. Trans Video subsequently informed the Court of the same as part of a joint CMC statement filed on September 16, 2011. See Docket No. 132 (St. at 3).

On September 23, 2011, this Court held the hearing on Sony’s summary judgment motion. During the hearing, the Court indicated that it had concerns about the validity of claim 3 of the ‘801 patent. See Docket No. 132 (civil minutes). A week later, on September 30, 2011, Trans Video

1 formally filed its motion to amend. See Docket No. 132 (motion). Two weeks after that, the Court
2 granted Sony’s motion for summary judgment. See Docket No. 139 (order). Thus, unless the Court 3 were to grant Trans Video’s motion to amend, this case would be terminated and judgment entered 4 in Sony’s favor.

5 II. DISCUSSION

6 A. Legal Standard

7 Typically, amendments to pleadings are governed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15, 8 which provides in relevant part that a “court should freely give leave [to] amend when justice so 9 requires.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a). The instant case, however, is a patent infringement action, and 10 therefore Trans Video argues that the governing legal standard is provided not only by Rule 15 but 11 also by Patent Local Rule 3-6. The local rule provides in relevant part that amendment of 12 infringement contentions “may be made only by order of the Court upon a timely showing of good 13 cause.” Pat. L.R. 3-6. The rule goes on to state that one example of a circumstance that “may, 14 absent undue prejudice to the non-moving party, support a finding of good cause” is “[a] claim 15 construction by the Court different from that proposed by the party seeking amendment.” Pat. L.R.
16 3-6(a).

17 Sony does not dispute that both Rule 15 and Patent Local Rule 3-6 are applicable.
18 Accordingly, the Court shall consider both Rule 15 as well as Patent Local Rule 3-6 in determining 19 whether to grant or deny Trans Video’s motion. Ultimately, there is some overlap in analysis. For 20 example, under Rule 15, undue delay by the party seeking leave to amend is a factor that a court 21 may consider. See Bowles v. Reade, 198 F.3d 752, 757-58 (9th Cir. 1999). Similarly, under Patent 22 Local Rule 3-6, good cause for an amendment can be established only where the party seeking leave 23 to amend shows diligence. See, e.g., Oracle Am., Inc. v. Google Inc., No. C 10-03561 WHA, 2011 24 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87251, at *7 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 8, 2011) (stating that, under Patent Local Rule 3-6, 25 “good cause requires a showing of diligence”) (internal quotation marks omitted); Acer, Inc. v. Tech.
26 Props., Nos. 5:08-cv-00877 JF/HRL, 5:08-cv-00882 JF/HRL, 5:08-cv-05398 JF/HRL, 2010 U.S.
27 Dist. LEXIS 142472, at *17 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 10, 2010) (stating that, “[b]ecause TPL has not 28 demonstrated diligence, the inquiry should end” – although going on to briefly discuss prejudice).

1           There are, however, some differences between Rule 15 and Patent Local Rule 3-6. Most 2 notably, under Rule 15, undue delay by itself “is insufficient to justify denying a motion to amend.”
3 Bowles, 198 F.3d at 758. There must also be either (1) prejudice to the opposing party, (2) bad faith 4 by the moving party, or (3) futility of the amendment. See id. (noting that “[w]e have previously 5 reversed the denial of a motion for leave to amend where the district court did not provide a 6 contemporaneous specific finding of prejudice to the opposing party, bad faith by the moving party, 7 or futility of the amendment”). In contrast, under Patent Local Rule 3-6, if there is no showing of 8 diligence, then a court need not even entertain whether the amendment would prejudice the 9 nonmoving party. See Oracle, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87251, at *7; Acer, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10 142472, at *17. This approach was approved by the Federal Circuit in O2 Micro International Ltd.
11 v. Monolithic Power Systems, Inc., 467 F.3d 1355 (Fed. Cir. 2006).

12 B.       Undue Delay/Diligence

13           Based on the record, the Court concludes that Trans Video unduly delayed in seeking leave 14 to amend and failed to act with the requisite diligence.

15           As a preliminary matter, the Court notes that Trans Video could have included claim 4 at the 16 outset of the litigation but made the conscious tactical decision not to. In its papers and at the 17 hearing, Trans Video failed to establish that the decision not to include claim 4 was anything but a 18 strategic choice. In fact, in its papers and again at the hearing, Trans Video indicated that the only 19 reason why it did not include claim 4 was that it would have had to argue a claim construction 20 position on claim 4 that was inconsistent with its claim construction position on claim 3. One of the 21 differences between claim 3 and claim 4 is that claim 3 includes the element of a “master 22 communications unit,” while claim 4 does not. In this lawsuit, Trans Video decided to stake out the 23 position that the inventions claimed in the ‘801 patent require the uploading of video by the users, 24 and uploading requires a “master communications unit.” Because claim 4 does not have the element 25 of a master communications unit, Trans Video made the choice not to assert claim 4, see Mot. at 8-26 10; Reply at 11, even though it could have offered an alternative legal theory – one that did not 27 require the uploading of videos – in order to make claim 4 a viable claim as well. According to 28 Trans Video, asserting claim 4 while pursuing its construction of claim 3 would have damaged its

1 credibility. But alternative theories of liability are not uncommon in litigation. At the very least, 2 Trans Video knowingly assumed a risk in not advancing alternative theories at the outset of the 3 lawsuit. That Judge Patel stayed the case for approximately a year does not detract from this fact.

4 The Court, however, need not rest its undue delay finding on Trans Video’s strategic choice.
5 The Court must also evaluate whether Trans Video diligently moved to amend after receiving Judge 6 Patel’s claim construction order. Trans Video argues that Judge Patel’s claim construction was the 7 impetus for its motion to amend.

8 The record establishes that, upon issuance of Judge Patel’s order on May 18, 2011, Trans 9 Video should have known that its construction of claim 3 was not accepted and that it no longer had 10 a tactical reason to withhold claim 4. Yet Trans Video still waited more than four months – i.e., 11 until September 30, 2011 – to file its motion to amend. Trans Video’s decision to wait is even more 12 problematic given the fact that, during the claim construction briefing, Sony expressly noted that 13 claim 3 was invalid based on a written description problem. See Docket No. 112 (Br. at 13 n.7, 21).
14 In other words, Trans Video had an incentive to get claim 4 in the litigation as soon as possible 15 because Sony would likely be moving for summary judgment on claim 3 based on a lack of written 16 description. See Sandeford v. Plummer, No. C 06-06794 SBA (PR), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9489, at 17 *4 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 14, 2010) (noting that “[p]laintiff could have moved to amend at any time prior to 18 the filing of the motion for summary judgment but he did not do so”). And even after Sony did 19 move for summary judgment on July 29, 2011, Trans Video still did nothing with respect to 20 amendment. In fact, in its opposition to the summary judgment motion, it reaffirmed that claim 3 21 was the only claim at issue in the litigation.

22 Finally, it should be noted that, after issuance of the claim construction order, Trans Video 23 actually revised its infringement contentions (on June 13, 2011). See Hanley Decl. ¶ 2 & Ex. 1 24 (letter from counsel for Trans Video stating that infringement contentions were being revised to 25 provide additional technical detail in light of Judge Patel’s claim construction order and discovery 26 information not previously publicly available). Yet Trans Video failed to assert claim 4 in those 27 revisions or otherwise take steps to amend the complaint.

28

1           In its papers, Trans Video does little to explain how it acted with diligence. See, e.g., Mot. at 2 13 (claiming diligence because “(I) discovery has nine months to go; (ii) there will be no delay to 3 the case; (iii) Sony has already investigated the invalidity of claim 4,” each of which are prejudice 4 arguments). For example, Trans Video claims that it has not delayed the case; rather, Sony has by 5 seeking and getting the stay because of the reexamination. The problem with this argument is that it 6 does nothing to explain why Trans Video did not assert claim 4 either at the outset of the case or 7 why it waited four months after the claim construction order to move to amend.

8           As another example, Trans Video claims that it did not move to amend right after the claim 9 construction order issued because, soon after the order was issued, the case was reassigned to this 10 Court, and both it and Sony operated with the understanding that no trial schedule was in place.
11 That no trial schedule was in place, however, did not obviate the need for Trans Video to prosecute 12 the case. This case has never been without an assigned judge. Nothing prevented Sony from 13 moving for summary judgment in July 2011. Likewise, nothing prevented Trans Video from 14 advancing its case.

15           Finally, in its reply brief, Trans Video makes an argument that it did not delay because it 16 notified Sony (on September 12, 2011) about the amendment prior to the date that the parties 17 contemplated final infringement contentions would be due (on September 30, 2011). The Court 18 could well deem this argument waived because Trans Video did not make this argument in its 19 opening brief. In any event, on the merits, the argument is problematic. Based on the record, it 20 appears that, on the day that Trans Video told Sony about the proposed amendment (i.e., September 21 12, 2011), the parties had contemplated that final infringement contentions would already be due 22 (i.e., September 6, 2011). The joint CMC statement the parties filed back on June 21, 2011, stated 23 that final contentions would be due on September 6, 2011. See Docket No. 122 (statement). It was 24 not until September 16, 2011, that the parties filed a joint CMC statement, stating that final 25 contentions would be pushed back to September 30, 2011. See Docket No. 132 (statement).

26           The Court acknowledges that it is possible that the parties started talking about a new date 27 for final contentions before September 12. But even if, before September 12, the parties started 28

1 talking about pushing the date back to September 30, this was long after the claim construction order 2 of May 18.

3 C. Prejudice and/or Bad Faith

4 Trans Video contends that, notwithstanding any delay on its part, it should still be permitted 5 to amend because Sony would not be prejudiced by the amendment, particularly because Sony 6 would have adequate time to prepare a defense as trial is not scheduled until December of 2012. In 7 its papers, Sony argued that it would be prejudiced because, in the absence of an amendment, this 8 case would be over because the Court granted its motion for summary judgment. Sony also 9 contended that, if Trans Video had made claim 4 a part of this lawsuit earlier in the litigation, Sony 10 might have taken a different approach to claim construction than it did had claim 4 been involved.<sup>1</sup>

11 While there are problems with both of Sony's arguments on prejudice,<sup>2</sup> prejudice is not 12 dispositive. This is because, as stated above, prejudice is not a requirement under Patent Local Rule 13 3-6. Trans Video's failure to demonstrate diligence alone bars relief under Rule 3-6. Moreover, 14 prejudice is not an absolute requirement under Rule 15. As indicated above, undue delay combined 15 with bad faith is enough to justify a denial of a motion to amend. Here, the Court agrees with Sony 16 that the motion to amend was taken in bad faith, more specifically, as a last-ditch attempt to avoid 17 the case being dismissed in its entirety. Cf. Schlacter-Jones v. General Tel., 936 F.2d 435, 443 (9th 18 Cir. 1991) (stating that "[a] motion for leave to amend is not a vehicle to circumvent summary 19 judgment"), overruled in part on other grounds by Cramer v. Consolidated Freightways, Inc., 255 20 F.3d 683, 692 (9th Cir. 2001).

21 Trans Video made no attempt to seek an amendment in the immediate aftermath of the claim 22 construction order. Trans Video's explanation for its delay, i.e., the reassignment of the case from

23
24 <sup>1</sup> There are overlapping terms in claims 3 and 4.

25 <sup>2</sup> As to its first argument, Sony has not cited any authority to demonstrate that that is the 26 kind of prejudice contemplated by courts for purposes of Rule 15 or Patent Local Rule 3-6.
27 Generally, the issue is not whether the defendant would be required to engage in additional work in 28 response to newly amended claims. The question is what incremental prejudice results from the delay in asserting those claims (e.g., in ability to complete discovery because of approaching trial date). As for the second argument, while it is not without any force, Sony has not provided any specifics at the hearing as to what it would have done differently at claim construction had Trans Video included claim 4 prior to claim construction.

1 Judge Patel to the undersigned, rings hollow because, even after claim construction and the 2 reassignment, it expressly reaffirmed to this Court on two separate occasions that claim 3 was the 3 only claim in the case – first, in a joint CMC statement and then in its opposition to the motion for 4 summary judgment. It was only after briefing was completed on the summary judgment motion and 5 the hearing on the motion was a week and a half away – i.e., when the proverbial writing was on the 6 wall – that Trans Video first expressed to Sony that it wanted to move to amend. And Trans Video 7 filed this motion only after the Court stated its grave concerns about the viability of claim 3 in light 8 of the written description issue.

9 Finally, Trans Video’s tactical decision to withhold claim 4 at the outset because its assertion 10 would be inconsistent with its construction argument as to claim 3 – in order to preserve Trans 11 Video’s credibility – smacks of gaming the Court and opposing party. The Court finds Trans 12 Video’s tactical shifting of positions troubling and contrary to this Court’s effort to eliminate, via its 13 Patent Local Rules, “shifting sands” litigation tactics. See Kilopass Tech., Inc. v. Sidense Corp., No.
14 C 10-02066 SI, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126837, at *3-4 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 2, 2011) (stating that, “[i]n 15 contrast to the more liberal policy for amending pleadings, the philosophy behind amending claim 16 charts is decidedly conservative, and designed to prevent the shifting sands approach to claim 17 construction”; adding that “[t]he patent local rules were designed to require parties to crystallize 18 their theories of the case early in the litigation and to adhere to those theories once they have been 19 disclosed”) (internal quotation marks omitted).

III. CONCLUSION

In sum, the Court concludes that Trans Video has failed to act with the requisite diligence and that its belated motion to amend was made in bad faith, only as a last-ditch attempt to avoid the summary judgment. Accordingly, the motion to amend, whether made pursuant to Rule 15 or Patent Local Rule 3-6, lacks merit and is accordingly denied.

Because the Court is denying the motion to amend, and has already granted Sony's motion for summary judgment, there are no claims remaining in the case, and, therefore, the Court orders the Clerk of the Court to enter judgment in favor of Sony and close the file in this case.

This order disposes of Docket No. 136.

IT IS SO ORDERED.
