RULES

Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(5)(A)(ii) 2

1 Defendant Sony Computer Entertainment America LLC (“SCEA”) respectfully submits
2 this response to the addendum brief (Docket #133) the named plaintiffs (the “Class
3 Representatives”) submitted with their opposition to SCEA’s Motion to Compel.

4 I. DISCOVERY RELATED TO THE FALSE WEBSITE POSTING IS RELEVANT

5 Aside from the procedural flaws related to their submission of an addendum brief, set 6 forth in SCEA’s Reply in support of its Motion to Compel, the arguments in Class
7 Representatives’ addendum brief fail on several grounds. Class Representatives characterize the 8 false posting on Mr. Ventura’s counsel’s website as a “common” occurrence,¹ yet fail to identify 9 a single similar occurrence in a class action litigation. Moreover, the unique circumstances of the 10 posting – supposedly made without the law firm’s knowledge or authorization – strongly suggests 11 its author may be a member of the community of hackers attacking the PS3’s security.² The 12 relevance of the posting and its origin is further demonstrated by the fact that (1) Update 3.21, the 13 subject of this litigation, was issued as a security measure due to hacking; (2) the posting was 14 directed at this litigation and misled the public; and (3) there are renewed hacking efforts directed 15 not only at the PS3, but specifically at Update 3.21.

16 Class Representatives cite to only one case – which is wholly inapposite – to justify their 17 refusal to produce this relevant evidence.³ The defendant in that case subpoenaed the plaintiff’s 18 counsel to produce all documents concerning any “civil or criminal investigations,” “civil 19 lawsuits,” “bar or ethical investigations, complaint, action or sanctions,” or efforts to terminate 20 retainer agreements on the theory that these documents would demonstrate whether counsel was

24 ¹ Class Reps’ Addendum Opp. to Motion to Compel (Docket #133), 1:10

25 ² Class Representatives represent that the posting was made by an “as-yet-to-be identified person 26 or persons” who “gained unauthorized access to” Mr. Ventura’s attorneys website. Class Reps’ 27 Addendum Opp. to Motion to Compel (Docket #133), 1:7-8. Neither SCEA nor the Court is able 28 to ascertain if this is true because Mr. Ventura’s counsel refuses to produce any documents related to the posting.

³ Nothing in the section of Newberg on Class Actions that Class Representatives rely on indicates that the discovery SCEA seeks is irrelevant. In fact, it only makes broad statements regarding discovery as to class counsel’s adequacy.

1 able to prosecute the action.⁴ The court quashed the subpoena on relevancy grounds after finding 2 that the ability to prosecute had already been amply demonstrated.⁵

3 A. Communications Regarding The Posting Are Relevant And Not Privileged

4 The posting and communications related to it are also pertinent because they bear on the 5 public's understanding of this litigation.⁶ On its face, the posting materially misstated the status
6 and outcome of this litigation and bordered on defamation.⁷ Any communications prompted by 7 this erroneous publication, particularly any that caused further confusion regarding the case, or 8 any attempt to use the false posting as a means of securing additional litigants, would obviously 9 bear on adequacy of representation.⁸ This concern is well-founded in light of the Class
10 Representatives' continued mischaracterizations of the content of the posting itself: at least four 11 times in their opposition they assert the posting described the lawsuit as "settled,"⁹ when in fact it 12 unequivocally said SCEA lost by default.¹⁰ Even worse, Class Representatives contend the 13 posting does "not refer to the litigation in any meaningful sense" – what could be more 14 meaningful than whether a defendant defaulted and was ordered to pay damages as a result? And 15 their reliance on Lopez v. Tyson Foods, is equally disingenuous. The Court said only that 16 Nebraska's Wage Payment Act (Nebraska Revised Statutes sections 48-1288 to 48-1232) does 17 not inherently require an individual inquiry regarding class members' claims that would per se
18 preclude class certification.¹¹

24 ⁷ See SCEA's Motion to Compel (Docket #116), 23:14-16.

25 ⁸ In addition, contrary to Class Representatives' baseless theory, evidence related to Class Counsel's adequacy, including related to their communications with putative class members, is relevant whether or not it took place before or after the filing of this lawsuit. Class Reps' Addendum Opp. to Motion to Compel (Docket # 133), 2:22-24.

it's intentions in court....").

1 Class Representatives blanket assertion that “[e]ach of those communications, and their 2 response...was in essence a request for legal advice” lacks any factual or legal support.¹² They 3 offer nothing to demonstrate that a privilege would attach.¹³ To the contrary, Mr. Ventura’s 4 counsel advised anyone contacting it that such communications were not privileged or part of any 5 attorney client relationship.¹⁴

6 In addition, Tien v. Superior Court will not allow Class Representative to shield the 7 requested communications from disclosure.¹⁵ In Tien, the defendant sought production of the 8 identities and contact information of the putative class members, in a wage-and-hour class action, 9 who contacted plaintiff’s counsel as a result of the parties’ mailing of a neutral letter informing 10 the class of the litigation.¹⁶ Thus the context of the case renders it is inapposite, but indeed the 11 factors the Tien court concluded weighed against disclosure support compelled production here.
12 Tien was an employment case, which creates a “sensitive context” for publication of putative 13 class members’ names to the defendant due to their ongoing relationship and obvious concerns of 14 retaliation – indeed, several class members had explicitly asked plaintiff’s counsel not to reveal 15 their contacts.¹⁷ More importantly, Tien turned on the fact that the defendant-employer had the 16 identity of all putative class members as a result of their employment relationship, and could 17 obtain relevant information from class members directly, and as their employer, possessed 18 relevant facts regarding their pay, number of hours worked, and meal and rest breaks. Thus 19 withholding a list of those class members who had contacted plaintiff’s counsel would not have a

1 “significant impact” on the action.¹⁸ In contrast, the false posting on counsel’s website was 2 effectively broadcast to the world, was a supposed incidence of the very hacking that SCEA is 3 trying to thwart, SCEA has no other means of determining the scope and effect of the false 4 publication and resulting confusion among putative class members, and there is a very real and 5 significant possibility that it could cause confusion with regard to future court-approved notices
6 distributed to the class.

7 II. CONCLUSION

8 Based on the foregoing, as well as the arguments set forth in its Motion to Strike and 9 Reply in support of that motion, defendant Sony Computer Entertainment America LLC 10 respectfully requests that the Court enter an order compelling the Class Representatives to 11 produce the documents and things requested and appear for deposition.
