Notes & Sources

[1] Exhibit 14

[2] Armstrong business model finance presentation projected that Sun would earn revenues through the end of FY09 in connection with Project Armstrong. The timing of expected Armstrong sales is shifted to begin in late 2008 to correspond to the timing of actual Android sales. Sun Microsystems, "Project Armstrong: Business Model," February 2006, OAGOOGL100166874 - OAGOOGL100166899, at OAGOOGL100166884.

[3] Sun would have required a share of the proceeds from Google's replacement business model to compensate for risk to existing Sun business model due to incompatible license. In the event that the platform is a commercial success, Sun shares in that success. Calculated using actual Android ad revenue for years 2008 - 2010 and estimate for 2011 taken from Google OC Quarterly Reviews. GOOGL100303725; GOOGL101-00053552; GOOGL177-00053555.

[4] Includes direct benefits such as net revenues from the Android Market and DTC handset sales. Also includes indirect benefits such as greater access to end users and the facilitation of other products sales (music, videos, books).

[5] The Litigation Premium is meant to reflect the fact that the starting point terms were negotiated before the patents at issue were found to be valid. Thus, the starting point reflects an uncertainty discount that is left unquantified here.
