UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA
EUREKA DIVISION

JOHN DUGAN, et al.,
Plaintiffs,

v.

LLOYDS TSB BANK, PLC,
Defendants.

Case No. 12-cv-02549-WHA (NJV)

ORDER GRANTING IN PART PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO COMPEL

Re: Dkt. No. 229

Plaintiffs' motion to compel further production of documents and witnesses from defendant Lloyds TSB Bank, PLC ("Lloyds"), came on for hearing on September 3, 2013. For the reasons stated below, the court grants in part and denies in part the motion to compel.

BACKGROUND

Defendant Lloyds TSB Bank, PLC, is a bank organized under the laws of the United Kingdom with branches in Hong Kong and New York, among other places. Plaintiffs' claims in connection with certain Lloyds' loan products include contractual breaches, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and violations of consumer protection laws

Plaintiffs obtained Lloyds' "dual currency" loans. These loans, which herein Lloyds labels as International Mortgage Service ("IMS") loans: (1) were stated in U.S. dollars but could be redenominated into foreign currency at the borrower's discretion; (2) once redenominated, were allegedly subject to a "principal cap" of 120 percent of the original principal; (3) were subject to a variable interest rate to be set at 1.5 percent above Lloyds' "cost of funds"; and (4) were secured by real property in the United States.

Doc. No. 203 at 1-2. The district court certified two classes with respect to the 120% principal cap, but denied Plaintiffs' motion to certify a cost of funds class. Doc. No. 203 at 8-12.

Plaintiffs have sought discovery regarding the calculation of Lloyds' cost of funds.

Plaintiffs propounded document requests and noticed the deposition of Lloyds pursuant to Fed. R.

1 Civ. P. 30(b)(6). Lloyds offered Richard Drean as its witness to testify about cost of funds topics, 2 but Plaintiffs were displeased with Drean’s responses relating to how Lloyds actually calculated 3 the cost of funds. Plaintiffs therefore sought to depose specific persons as additional witnesses 4 regarding the cost of funds calculations, and also requested Lloyds produce additional documents
5 from specific custodians. In January 2013, Lloyds responded it would not produce the witnesses
6 or their documents because the witnesses were affiliated with Lloyds’ parent company, Lloyds 7 Banking Group (“LBG”). LBG is not a defendant in this action. In May 2013, Lloyds reiterated it 8 would not produce electronically stored information for LBG custodians that Lloyds had 9 previously identified as persons with responsive information. Lloyds took the position it was not 10 obligated to produce the discovery because it and LBG were separate legal entities and the LBG 11 documents and witnesses were “not necessarily” within Lloyds’ custody and control. Plaintiffs 12 filed this motion, asking the court to compel the production of witnesses and documents or, in the 13 alternative, issue a Letter of Request for assistance to the central judicial authority of Great 14 Britain.

15 DISCUSSION

16 A. Does Lloyds Have “Control” Over LBG Documents?

17 Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 34, Lloyds must produce any documents under its 18 “possession, custody, or control.” Plaintiffs argue that Lloyds controls the responsive LBG 19 documents based on the corporate relationship between LBG and Lloyds.

20 In the Ninth Circuit, “control” is defined as “the legal right to obtain documents upon 21 demand.” In re Citric Acid Litigation, 191 F.3d 1090, 1107 (9th Cir. 1999) (“Citric Acid”). A 22 “practical ability to obtain the requested documents” from a related organization is not enough 23 because the related organization “could legally -- and without breaching any contract -- [] refuse to 24 turn over such documents.” Id. at 1107-08. Plaintiffs urge the court to adopt a broader definition 25 of “control” than the one articulated in Citric Acid because of the parent-subsidiary relationship 26 between LBG and Lloyds. (Citric Acid involved two members of the same accounting 27 association.) They reason that, because Citric Acid cited decisions from other circuits that 28 “adopted a more expansive definition of ‘legal control,’” the Ninth Circuit would approve looking

1 at other factors that suggest control might exist even in the absence of a “legal right to obtain 2 documents on demand.” See Doc. No. 247 at 12-14 & n.7. For example, Plaintiffs urge the court
3 to follow the reasoning of AFL Telecommunications LLC v. SurplusEQ.com, Inc., 2012 U.S. Dist.
4 LEXIS 92892 (D. Az. July 5, 2012) and the cases on which it relies. See Doc. No. 247 at 16; Doc 5 No. 251 at 2-5. In AFL, the Arizona district court found uncontroverted evidence that the wholly-6 owned subsidiary was the exclusive authorized distributor of its parent’s product and the exclusive 7 licensee of its parent’s intellectual property rights related to the product; that the licensee 8 relationship between the parent and the subsidiary was created specifically so that the subsidiary 9 could file the lawsuit before the court; that the subsidiary housed two of its parent’s technicians in 10 its offices; and that the subsidiary and the parent maintained a close relationship during the 11 lawsuit. 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92892 at *6. Although there was no evidence that the subsidiary 12 had the legal right to acquire documents from its parent on demand, the AFL court adopted the 13 reasoning of the out-of-circuit authority cited in Citric Acid and ordered the subsidiary to produce 14 documents held by its parent. Id., at *7 (relying on Gerling Int’l Ins. Co. v. Comm’r, 839 F.2d 131 15 (3rd Cir. 1988)). In Choice-Intersil Microsystems, Inc. v Agere Systems, Inc., 224 F.R.D. 471 16 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 30, 2004), the district court did order a wholly-owned subsidiary to produce 17 documents in the possession of its parent. In relevant part, the district court found that the wholly-18 owned subsidiary had access to its parent’s documents because it shared relevant databases with 19 its parent and, upon demand, could obtain high-level documents from the parent regarding the 20 marketing of the relevant product. Id. at 473-73. Even if the court were inclined to follow this 21 reasoning, Plaintiffs have not made the same showing here.¹

22 Plaintiffs, however, have not been able to cite a single Ninth Circuit or Northern District of 23 California opinion that has accepted their reasoning. For example, Plaintiffs quote Perez v. State 24 Farm Mutual Auto. Ins. Co., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41009, *9 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 11, 2011), for the 25

26 ¹ Lloyds represents that the “LTSB and GCT drive” identified in their production log was a 27 typo and does not indicate that Lloyds had access to LTSB documents. Lloyds clarifies that the 28 log should have read “GCT shared drive” and represents it does not have access to that drive. See
Doc. No. 244, ¶ 9. Lloyds avers that it has no legal or contractual right to obtain LBG documents upon demand. Id., ¶ 7.

1 proposition that “the determination of control is often fact-specific” and that the “relationship 2 between the parties” is central to each determination. Doc. No. 247 at 12. But in Perez, the 3 district court relied on Citric Acid to deny the requested discovery. Id. at *10 (evidence that a 4 party had obtained similar documents from a non-party in the past was “plainly insufficient” to 5 show that the party had “control” of the documents requested in the litigation).

6 Plaintiffs describe the decisions in this district that disagree with their position as 7 “extensions of Ninth Circuit law, not decisions squarely within its precedent.” Doc. No. 251 at 4.
8 This court disagrees. The court finds more persuasive the reasoning of cases in this district that 9 have required parties to establish that a subsidiary has a legal right to obtain documents from its 10 parent on demand before compelling those parties to produce documents. See, e.g., Genentech, 11 Inc. v. Trustees of the University of Penn., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 128526, *9-*10 (N.D. Cal.
12 Nov. 7, 2011) (“The fact that Genentech is wholly owned by Roche, and Roche controls 13 Genentech’s Herceptin operations . . . suggests at most that Roche has the legal right to obtain 14 documents pertaining to Genentech. Penn has not shown that the converse is true”) (citing the 15 unpublished case Tessera Inc. v. Micron Tech., Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25114) (N.D. Cal.
16 Mar. 22, 2006)); see also Hambrecht Wine Group, L.P. v. Millennium Imp. LLC, 2006 U.S. Dist.
17 LEXIS 86279, *5 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 14, 2006) (“When a court is confronted with separate legal 18 entities, ‘proof of theoretical control is insufficient; a showing of actual control is required.’ The 19 ‘access’ alleged by plaintiff is not the same as the ‘possession, custody, or control’ required by the 20 Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Also, plaintiff fails to distinguish between a parent’s control 21 over a subsidiary, and a subsidiary’s control over its parent. Thus, although plaintiff might be able 22 to argue successfully that after the acquisition LVMH had control over Millennium’s documents, 23 plaintiff certainly has shown no legal right possessed by Millennium to exert any control over 24 LVMH’s documents”).

25 Plaintiffs bear the burden of proving that Lloyds has “control” over LBG’s documents.
26 See Genentech, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 128526, at *5. Plaintiffs have provided evidence that 27 Lloyds is a wholly-owned subsidiary of LBG; that LBG has provided documents and witnesses in 28 this case to support Lloyds’ defense (including Mr. Drean, see infra); that LBG and Lloyds share

1 the same internal legal group; that the two have the exact same ten-member Board of Directors; 2 and that LBG played a critical role in administering and profiting from the loans at issue in this 3 lawsuit. See, generally, Doc. Nos. 248 & 249. But, LBG and Lloyds are separate entities, and 4 Plaintiffs have not provided any evidence that Lloyds has the legal control to obtain documents on 5 demand from its parent. One of the attorneys who collected documents pursuant to Plaintiffs’ 6 discovery requests, Susannah McDonald, submitted a declaration in this matter. See Doc. No. 244.
7 She declares that Lloyds is a subsidiary of LBG; that LBG provides banking and financial services 8 through subsidiaries, including Lloyds; and that the boards of the two entities maintain separate 9 meeting agendas and separate minutes. Id., at ¶¶ 5-6, 8. In addition, McDonald avers that Lloyds 10 “has no ownership interest in its parent company [LBG], and has no contractual or other legal 11 right to obtain [LBG’s] documents or information upon demand.” Id., at ¶ 7. Macdonald also 12 declares that the loan products at issue in this action were developed by Lloyds, offered by Lloyds, 13 and serviced by Lloyds; LBG “does not and has not offered or serviced IMS Loans.” Id., at ¶ 11.
14 Although Plaintiffs’ counsel argued at the hearing that LBG offered the loans through its 15 subsidiary, Lloyds, Plaintiffs have not rebutted McDonald’s declaration with any evidence. While 16 the evidence Plaintiffs have offered might be sufficient to establish control under the more 17 expansive Gerling test², the court finds it is insufficient to establish control under Citric Acid.

18 During the hearing, the court asked Lloyds to confirm that Lloyds had produced in 19 discovery responsive documents stored on drives (or other media or hardware) it shared with LBG 20 and to which Lloyds employees also had access. Lloyds confirmed that any documents that were 21 equally available to both Lloyds and LBG had been included in Lloyds’ discovery efforts and 22 were being produced. The court hereby clarifies that, if any Lloyds custodians have access to 23 documents on a drive or system that is considered or labeled an LBG drive or system, Lloyds must 24 review those documents to determine whether they are responsive and if so, produce them.

27 ² The court notes that the Macdonald declaration establishes that several of the factors the 28 AFL Court focused on are absent in this instance. The court also notes that, unlike in AFL, LBG did not create Defendant for the purpose of having it file this lawsuit.

1 B. Are Plaintiffs Entitled To Depose Additional Witnesses Under The Federal Rules of 2 Civil Procedure?

3 Plaintiffs complain that the 30(b)(6) witness Lloyds designated to testify about the cost of 4 funds, Richard Drean, was inadequate. They argue that Drean should have known more about 5 how specific components of the cost of funds were constructed, including the LTP curve, and how 6 this construction changed over time. Drean instead testified that people in his group “receive[d] 7 the curve” and passed it on. Doc. No. 248, Ex. C at 64:1-14. He agreed that his group’s function 8 could be described as “fairly ministerial.” Id. at 64:17-23. Plaintiffs did not want to depose a 9 witness with ministerial responsibilities, but one who actually knew how the curve worked.
10 Plaintiffs argue that Drean should have prepared more carefully for his deposition. They contend 11 that there is evidence that other Lloyds’ employees emailed persons at LBG regarding the LTP 12 charge, and that those employees received responses from LBG. Plaintiffs argue that Drean, like 13 those other employees, should have asked LBG to answer some questions before his deposition.
14 Plaintiffs at oral argument confirmed that the responses to the emails they referenced were 15 produced by Lloyds in discovery, but complain that the responses were not detailed. If anything, 16 this undermines their argument that either other persons at Lloyds would have been better 17 witnesses, or that Drean could have educated himself more for the deposition by asking questions 18 of LBG.

19 Plaintiffs seek to look inside the “black box” that is LBG’s cost of funds. In essence, they 20 argue that, if no one at Lloyds has the key to the box, they are entitled to get someone at LBG to 21 open the box. They therefore seek an order compelling two LBG employees³, Duncan Alcock and 22 Andrei Magasiner, to testify as “managing agents” in this matter pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(b).
23 Plaintiffs have not established that Alcock and Magasiner are managing agents for Lloyds; the 24 evidence establishes at most that these individuals may be managing agents of non-party LBG.
25 See Doc. Nos. 248 & 249, Exs. X, Y, BB, DD. But LBG and Lloyds are separate entities, and 26 LBG is not a party in this matter. Plaintiffs have not established that Lloyds has the contractual or

27 _____
28 ³ In her declaration, McDonald asserts that Alcock and Magasiner are LBG employees, not Defendant’s employees. Doc. No. 244 at ¶ 12.

1 legal right to secure the appearance of these witnesses for a deposition. Lloyds therefore cannot 2 be compelled to offer these two individuals for deposition. Plaintiffs must follow the Hague
3 Convention procedures for securing their appearance (or serve them in the U.S. if they travel 4 here). The court is concerned that Lloyds, when it was convenient, was able to access an LBG 5 employee and offer him as a Lloyds deponent. At the hearing, Lloyds confirmed that Dreaan is a 6 current LBG employee, and a former Lloyds employee; that it was determined, based on Dreaan's 7 past employment with Lloyds, that he would be the most appropriate 30(b)(6) deponent for 8 Lloyds; and that, when asked whether he would be willing to be a deponent for Lloyds, he 9 volunteered to do so. Lloyds contrasts this set of facts with Plaintiffs' attempts to depose two 10 LBG employees with no history of employment at Lloyds, who have not volunteered to be 11 deposed. The court understands Plaintiffs' skepticism, but Plaintiffs needed more to meet their 12 burden, and they have not.

13 C. Is A Letter of Request For International Assistance Justified?

14 Plaintiffs ask the court to issue a Letter of Request for assistance of the central judicial 15 authority of Great Britain to obtain deposition testimony of Alcock and Magasiner as well as 16 documents that relate directly to the LTP charges, the IMS Loan program, and to Plaintiffs' loans.

17 Lloyds' opposition to Plaintiffs' request for this international discovery is anemic. Lloyds 18 first argues that the expense of the discovery is not justified now that the district court has denied 19 the motion to certify a cost of funds class. Lloyds, however, has not supported its assertion of 20 undue burden with any facts. The court has simply no evidence before it that would allow it to 21 conclude that the burden, in this instance, is not justified. Lloyds' second argument that the 22 information sought is "not relevant to the Plaintiffs' individual claims because those claims are 23 about the amount LBSB charged Plaintiffs, not the calculation of the amount" LBG charged 24 Lloyds (Doc. No. 243 at 18), is unconvincing. The court finds that the information sought by 25 Plaintiffs through their Letter of Request is likely to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence 26 in Plaintiffs' individual cases, and further finds that Lloyds has failed to offer any evidence that 27 the discovery would impose an undue burden.

28 The court is aware that Lloyds has filed a motion for protective order and cost-sharing,

1 which relates in part to this motion to compel. Given that international discovery typically 2 proceeds slowly, the court will be able to address the issue of cost-sharing before Lloyds has 3 incurred any costs in responding to the Letter of Request.

4 At the hearing, the court inquired whether it had the authority to issue the Letter of 5 Request, or whether the Letter of Request should be issued by Judge Alsup. Plaintiffs are to make 6 that determination and submit the proposed Letter of Request to the appropriate judge. If 7 Plaintiffs determine Judge Alsup should issue the Letter of Request, they should submit their 8 proposed order together with a copy of this order to explain why they are proceeding in that 9 manner.

10 CONCLUSION

11 For the reasons stated above, the court denies Plaintiff's motion to compel the production 12 of documents under Fed. R. Civ. P. 34 and witnesses under Fed. R. Civ. P. 30. The court grants 13 Plaintiffs' motion to issue Letter of Request subject to determining whether it or the district court 14 should issue the Letter.

16 IT IS SO ORDERED.
