UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

MINDEN PICTURES, INC.,

No. C-12-4601 EMC

Plaintiff,

v.

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANT’S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND DENYING PLAINTIFF’S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

JOHN WILEY & SONS, INC.,

Defendant.

(Docket Nos. 62, 63)

I. INTRODUCTION

In this action, Plaintiff Minden Pictures, Inc., a stock photography agency, brings suit against Defendant John Wiley & Sons, Inc. (“Wiley”), an educational publisher, alleging copyright infringement for exceeding usage restrictions in photograph licensing agreements. Before the Court are the parties’ cross-motions for summary judgment. The sole issue raised by these motions is whether Minden has standing under the Copyright Act to assert the claims raised in this case. The Court previously dismissed Minden’s claims to the extent it relied upon certain copyright assignments to establish standing. However, the various photographers entered into agency agreements with Minden, and the Court ordered the parties to conduct discovery and file cross-motions for summary judgment as to whether these agency agreements convey standing on Minden. For the following reasons, the Court concludes that Minden does not have standing to assert claims for copyright infringement under the Copyright Act and accordingly GRANTS Wiley’s motion for summary judgment.

1 Images in the Territory. Agency shall have the unrestricted, exclusive 2 right to distribute, License and/or exploit the Images in the Territory 3 through MP&A without seeking special permission to do so from 4 Photographer except as otherwise provided in this Agreement.
5 Photographer agrees that all Images are available for unrestricted, 6 exclusive, distribution, promotion and Licensing in the Territory by 7 MP&A except as otherwise provided in this Agreement. Photographer 8 will insure that no other parties will License reproduction rights to any 9 images which are identical to or Essentially Similar to any Images.

10 2.4 All negotiations concerning Licensing of Images by 11 MP&A shall be at MP&A's sole discretion without prior consultation 12 with the Photographer, except as provided under this Agreement.

13 Dkt. No. 63-4, at 18; see also, e.g., Dkt. No. 63-3, at 14-15 (2005 agreement between Minden and 14 Ingo Arndt providing essentially the same); Dkt. No. 63-3, at 24-25 (2000 agreement between 15 Minden and Bob Barbour providing the same); Dkt. No. 63-12, at 145-46 (2000 agreement between 16 Minden and Charles Nicklin providing the same). The agreements generally define licensing "as the 17 marketing, grant, lease, sale, use or other exploitation of reproduction rights to an Image or any 18 derivative rights thereof. This Agreement specifically does not provide for Agency to engage in 19 'Royalty Free' licensing of images." Dkt. No. 63-4, at 17.

20 In addition to granting Minden the authority to license others to use/reproduce the 21 photographs in question, the agency agreements also give Minden the authority to use the images 22 directly for promotional purposes. For example, Section 9.1 of the agency agreement with Bob 23 Barbour provides that Minden "shall have the right and sole discretion to reproduce and use any 24 Images for Promotions in any and all media without compensation to the Photographer." Dkt. No.
25 63-3, at 27. Further, Minden is given the "unrestricted right and sole discretion to make Duplicates 26 of any Images" as "required to distribute Images." Dkt. No. 63-3, at 37 (2003 agreement between 27 Minden and Fred Bavendam). Copyright ownership of the duplicates, however, is expressly stated 28 to "remain with the Photographer" and, if the Photographer so requests, Minden is obligated to destroy the duplicates at the termination of the agreement. Id.; see also Dkt. No. 63-3, at 18 (same); Dkt. No. 63-8, at 7 (same).

Each agreement includes limitations on Minden's ability to issue licenses. For example, the agreement between Minden and Arndt provides:

1 2.5.1 All Image Licensing by MP&A which involve the grant 2 of rights as follows shall require prior written permission by Photographer.

- 3 2.5.1.1 the grant of rights in perpetuity
- 4 2.5.1.2 the grant of total exclusive rights
- 5 2.5.1.3 the purchase or buyout of all rights

6 Dkt. No. 63-3, at 15. The agreement between Minden and Barbour includes similar limitations, as 7 well as the limitation that Minden may not issue licenses for the “limited or unlimited edition 8 photographic prints other than for museum display” nor for use of images in books “of which greater 9 than 50% of the total are by Photographer” without prior written permission by the photographer.
Dkt. No. 63-3, at 25.

10 In addition, the agreements, to varying degrees, provide that the photographers retain the 11 right to use (and license others to use) the images. For example, the agreement between Minden and 12 Jim Brandenburg provides:

13 2.5.3 Photographer may use Images for personal promotion, 14 other personal projects, and editorial and commercial licensing to third 15 parties provided any such use is communicated to and cleared with 16 MP&A by providing all relevant data on a Minden Pictures rights clearance form . . . to insure all uses and Licenses of Photographers’s images are communicated to and recorded by MP&A.

17 Dkt. No. 63-4, at 18. Similarly, the agreement between Minden and Carr Clifton provides:

18 2.7 Photographer shall have the unlimited, unrestricted right to 19 license the Images, throughout the Territory, through his office 20 without Agency’s permission, except as provided for in this 21 Agreement. All images shall remain the sole and exclusive property of the Photographer, without limitation, including the copyright. Agency’s rights are solely for licensing purposes only as described herein.

22 Dkt. No. 63-5, at 12.

23 Finally, the agreements speak directly to copyright ownership, and they all provide that the 24 photographers will retain ownership of the copyright in the images covered by the agreements.
25 Thus, the agreement with Brandenburg states simply that “All images shall at all times remain the 26 sole and exclusive property of the Photographer, including the copyright.” Dkt. No. 63-4, at 20.
27 Other agreements include this language but with the added proviso that the copyright “shall be held 28 by MP&A solely for Licensing purposes described herein. Photographer grants Agency the right to

1 register such Images for copyright protection in Photographer’s name and the benefit of 2 Photographer. The costs of copyright registration shall be shared equally between Agency and 3 Photographer.” See, e.g., Dkt. No. 63-3, at 36.

4 III. DISCUSSION

5 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c) provides that summary judgment shall be rendered “if 6 the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the 7 affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issues as to any material fact and that the moving 8 party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). An issue of fact is genuine 9 only if there is sufficient evidence for a reasonable jury to find for the nonmoving party. See 10 Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 428-49 (1986). “The mere existence of a scintilla of 11 evidence . . . will be insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for 12 the [nonmoving party].” Id. at 252. At the summary judgment stage, evidence must be viewed in 13 the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in the 14 nonmovant’s favor. See id. at 255.

15 Minden, as Plaintiff in this action, has the burden of establishing that it has standing to 16 pursue this action. See Wash. Evmtl. Council v. Bellon, 732 F.3d 1131, 1139 (9th Cir. 2013) (“The 17 plaintiff . . . bears the burden of proof to establish standing ‘with the manner and degree of evidence 18 required at the successive stages of the litigation.’” (citation omitted)).

19 A. Statutory Framework

20 Under 17 U.S.C. § 501, only the “legal or beneficial owners of an exclusive right under a 21 copyright is entitled, subject to the requirements of section 411, to institute an action for any 22 infringement of that particular right committed while he or she is the owners of it.” See also Silvers 23 v. Sony Pictures Entert., Inc., 402 F.3d 881, 884 (9th Cir. 2005) (en banc) (“To be entitled to sue for 24 copyright infringement, the plaintiff must be the ‘legal or beneficial owner of an exclusive right 25 under a copyright.’”). The exclusive rights, the ownership of which confers standing to pursue a 26 copyright infringement action, are articulated in 17 U.S.C. § 106. This provision provides:

27 Subject to sections 107 through 122, the owner of copyright under this 28 title has the exclusive rights to do and to authorize any of the

- (1) to reproduce the copyrighted work in copies or phonorecords;
- (2) to prepare derivative works based upon the copyrighted work;
- (3) to distribute copies or phonorecords of the copyrighted work to the public by sale or other transfer of ownership, or by rental, lease, or lending;
- (4) in the case of literary, musical, dramatic, and choreographic works, pantomimes, and motion pictures and other audiovisual works, to perform the copyrighted work publicly;
- (5) in the case of literary, musical, dramatic, and choreographic works, pantomimes, and pictorial, graphic, or sculptural works, including the individual images of a motion picture or other audiovisual work, to display the copyrighted work publicly; and
- (6) in the case of sound recordings, to perform the copyrighted work publicly by means of a digital audio transmission.

Id. “[T]he list of exclusive rights found in § 106 is exhaustive If a right is not ‘specified,’ then it is not one of the exclusive rights granted by Congress.” Silvers, 402 F.3d at 886-87.

Section 501 grants standing to any legal or beneficial owner of “an exclusive right.” 17 U.S.C. § 501 (emphasis added). A direct implication of this language is that the different exclusive rights listed in § 106 may be owned by separate parties. Section 201 makes this explicit. Specifically, subsection (d) provides:

- (1) The ownership of a copyright may be transferred in whole or in part by any means of conveyance or by operation of law, and may be bequeathed by will or pass as personal property by the applicable laws of intestate succession.
- (2) Any of the exclusive rights comprised in a copyright, including any subdivision of any of the rights specified in section 106, may be transferred as provided by clause (1) and owned separately. The owner of any particular exclusive right is entitled, to the extent of that right, to all of the protection and remedies accorded to the copyright owner by this title.

17 U.S.C. § 201(d). Accordingly, the “exclusive rights” may be “unbundled” and transferred independently of the other exclusive right and any owner of an “exclusive right” may sue for infringement. See Silvers, 402 F.3d at 886 (“Congress wanted to ensure that an owner of any exclusive right in the copyright was entitled to bring a suit for infringement. Congress foresaw a permissible division of exclusive rights; the owner of any one of those exclusive rights may sue,

1 with other owners being entitled to notice and joiner. In this sense, Congress intended to ‘unbundle’ 2 the exclusive rights.” (emphases added)).

3 Further, “exclusive rights may be chopped up and owned separately, and each separate 4 owner of a subdivided exclusive right may sue to enforce that owned portion of an exclusive right, 5 no matter how small.” Id. at 887. For example, the Silvers Court spoke of an author of a novel 6 giving one party the copyright to the book while giving a different party the right to develop the 7 book into a screenplay. Id. Subdivision appears to be possible based on form of production, 8 geographic territory, or duration. As the Seventh Circuit has recognized:

9 HyperQuest is correct to observe that subdivision is possible. The 10 typical example is that of the author of a novel who gives an exclusive 11 license for the hardcover edition to one person and an exclusive 12 license for the movie version to a second. But it appears that these 13 subdivisions must be done cleanly, so that the limits of each holder’s rights can be defined. Perhaps for that reason, rights are usually subdivided along geographical lines or distinctions among forms of production.

14 HyperQuest, Inc. v. N’Site Solutions, Inc., 632 F.3d 377, 383 (7th Cir. 2011) (citations omitted); see 15 also Saregama India Ltd. v. Mosley, 635 F.3d 1284, 1292 n.22 (11th Cir. 2011) (“[A] copyright 16 owner can assign one, several, or all of its exclusive rights, and this assignment can be subject to 17 temporal or geographic limitations.”).

18 Finally, § 101 defines “transfer of copyright ownership” as an “assignment, mortgage, 19 exclusive license, or any other conveyance, alienation, or hypothecation of a copyright or of any of 20 the exclusive rights comprised in a copyright . . . but not including a nonexclusive license.” 17 21 U.S.C. § 101.

22 B. The Agency Agreements Do Not Convey Standing Upon Minden

23 Minden argues that the agency agreements convey standing upon it under the Copyright Act 24 because they convey co-ownership interests in § 106 exclusive rights. Specifically, Minden claims 25 the agency agreements “conveyed to Minden the rights to do, and to authorize, the following: to 26 reproduce the copyrighted works in copies; to distribute copies of the work to the public; and to 27 display the work publically.” Minden Mot. for Summary Judgment (“Minden MSJ”) at 1-2, Dkt.
28 No. 63. Minden claims that the “most important and undeniable incident of ownership evidenced by

1 all [the agency agreements] is Minden’s authority to issue licenses permitting third parties . . . to 2 reproduce, distribute, and display the images.” Id. at 15. The Court disagrees. Because the agency 3 agreements do not make Minden a legal or beneficial owner of any exclusive right under the 4 Copyright Act, Minden lacks standing to pursue this action.

5 1. The Agency Agreements and the Parties’ Subsequent Conduct Expressly State that 6 the Photographers Would Remain the Sole Owner of the Copyrights in the Images

7 As an initial matter, the agency agreements expressly state that the photographs shall “remain 8 the sole and exclusive property of the Photographer, including the copyright.” This is evidence that 9 the parties did not intend the agency agreements to convey to Minden any ownership interest in the 10 copyright. The reason is straightforward: If the parties had intended Minden to obtain an ownership 11 interest in the copyright, the images would not be the “sole and exclusive property” of the 12 photographer. Under 17 U.S.C. § 101, a transfer of copyright ownership not only needs to be in 13 writing, but it also must be clear and unambiguous. See, e.g., Weinstein Co. v. Smokewood Entmt.
14 Croup, LLC, 664 F. Supp. 2d 332, 338 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (“[T]he intention of a copyright owner 15 seeking to transfer an ownership interest must be clear and unequivocal.”); Bieg v. Hovnanian 16 Enters., Inc., 157 F. Supp. 2d 475 (E.D. Pa. 2001) (“The requirements for a valid transfer of 17 copyright ownership are simple: a transfer document must be in writing and signed, and it must be 18 clear.”). As the Ninth Circuit has held, “[i]f the copyright holder agrees to transfer ownership to 19 another party, that party must get the copyright holder to sign a piece of paper saying so.” See 20 Effects Associates, Inc. v. Cohen, 908 F.2d 555, 557 (9th Cir. 1990). Far from a clear and 21 unambiguous statement of intent to transfer copyright ownership to Minden, the agency agreements 22 appear to expressly disavow any such intent.

23 Further, the parties’ conduct subsequent to the execution of the agency agreement provides 24 further evidence that the photographers did not intend the agency agreements to confer any 25 copyright ownership interest. As recognized by this Court in its prior order, Minden and the 26 photographers executed a series of copyright assignments in 2012, prior to the filing of this suit. See 27 Minden

1 Pictures, 2013 WL 1995208, at *3.¹ These copyright assignments began with the following 2 statement: “The undersigned, the sole owner of the copyrights in the undersigned’s images . . .
3 selected by Minden Pictures, Inc. . . . and included in its collection, hereby assigns to Agency co-4 ownership of all copyrights in the Images.” Id. (emphasis added) In sending the copyright 5 assignment to one photographer, Larry Minden (owner of Minden Pictures) stated the following in 6 an email:

7 In order for us to have legal standing in US courts to claim damages 8 for you, we must be assigned at minimum co-ownership of copyrights 9 to function on your behalf. The attached document does this. I have 10 revised and sent a new much more limited form than sent earlier, 11 hoping you’ll find this easier to sign.

12 Basically, the new form assigns co-ownership of specific images for 13 the specific purpose of this legal challenge against this one company 14 and only for the time required to complete the challenge.

15 This case has the potential of yielding $10,000s for you. But I can 16 only represent your position oif [sic] you sign this document.
17 Otherwise I will have to drop your images from the case.

18 Dkt. No. 64-16, at 2.

19 The copyright assignments and Mr. Minden’s email reflect that both the photographers and 20 Minden believed that the existing agreements between the parties did not convey to Minden an 21 ownership interest in the images in question. The copyright assignments affirmed that the 22 photographers are the “sole owner of the copyrights” – an affirmation that belies any claim that the 23 photographers intended (or believed) that the prior agency agreements had already transferred a co-24 ownership interest. Further, Mr. Minden’s email to the photographer – quoted above – reveals his 25 belief that the agency agreements did not convey any co-ownership interest and suggests that at least 26 that photographer had expressed concerns about the possibility of transferring ownership to Minden.
27 Under California law,² the mutual intent of parties to a contract may be determined, inter alia, from 28 ¹ The Court ultimately concluded that Minden could not assert standing based on these copyright assignments – either on the ground that they conveyed nothing but a bare right to sue or that Minden was collaterally estopped from raising this argument as a result of Judge Alsup’s order in Minden Pictures, Inc. v. Pearson Educ., Inc., C11-05385 WHA, 2013 WL 812412 (N.D. Cal.

Mar. 5, 2013). See Minden, 2013 WL 1995208, at *7.

² The agency agreements expressly provide that it was to be interpreted according to the laws of the State of California.

1 the subsequent conduct of the parties. See In re Imperial Credit Indus., Inc., 527 F.3d 959, 966 (9th 2 Cir. 2008); see also S.O.S., Inc. v. Payday, Inc., 886 F.2d 1081, 1088 (9th Cir. 1989) (“We rely on 3 state law to provide the canons of contractual construction, but only to the extent such rules do not 4 interfere with federal copyright law or policy.”). Here, the subsequent statements and agreements 5 between the parties expressly state what the agency agreements themselves strongly imply: that the 6 photographers would remain the “sole owner” of the copyright even after the agency agreements.

7 2. Minden Is Not an Exclusive Licensee Under the Agency Agreements

8 Under § 101, one mechanism for transferring ownership of an exclusive right is through an 9 exclusive license. 17 U.S.C. § 101. An “exclusive” license is “[a] license that gives the licensee the 10 sole right to perform the licensed act . . . and that prohibits the licensor from performing the licensed 11 act and from granting the right to anyone else.” Black’s Law Dictionary 1003 (9th ed. 2009); see also 12 Corbello v. DeVito, 832 F. Supp. 2d 1231, 1244 (D. Nev. 2011) (“[T]he difference between 13 ‘exclusive’ and ‘nonexclusive’ licenses concerns the continuing ability of the grantor to use or 14 further license to others the licensed property during the period the license is in effect.”). Here, 15 Minden has expressly conceded that it is not an exclusive licensee of any § 106 exclusive right. See, 16 e.g., Transcript of Proceedings, May 9, 2013, at 7:10-11 (“The answer to that is no, Minden does 17 not contend it is an exclusive licensee”) (Dkt. No. 52); id. at 15:10-13 (“In almost every case 18 the photographer retained the right to sell his own licenses, so they are not an exclusive – they don’t 19 – Minden did not have an exclusive license.”).³

20 Minden argues that the fact it is not an exclusive licensee does not deprive it of standing 21 because § 101 broadly defines “transfer of copyright ownership” as “any other conveyance,

22
23 ³ In its motion for summary judgment, Minden states (in tension with its earlier concession), 24 that “[i]t is true that many of the Stock Photo Agreements likely qualify as exclusive licenses, 25 including for example, the Monteath Agreement.” Minden MSJ, at 20. However, it then states that 26 it does not contend that “all of the Stock Photo Agreements qualify as exclusive licenses for the 27 simple reason that it need not do so.” Id. It is apparent from Minden’s argument that it is seeking to 28 establish that all of the agency agreements have conveyed co-ownership rights to it and it has expressly disclaimed any reliance on an exclusive license theory. Further, even if there are examples of agency agreements which arguably constitute exclusive licenses, Minden has not adequately presented this argument. Given Minden’s concession and the arguments it has actually advanced, the Court will not, on its own, review every one of the numerous licensing agreements at issue in this case to determine whether any one agreement creates an exclusive license. Minden advances only a broader all-or-nothing argument.

1 alienation, or hypothecation, of a copyright or of any of the exclusive rights comprised in a 2 copyright.” 17 U.S.C. § 101; Minden Opp. at 5. Minden is correct – although it is not an exclusive 3 licensee and thus cannot claim an ownership interest thereunder, an exclusive license is but one way
4 for ownership interests to be conveyed. Accordingly, the Court now turns to whether the agency 5 agreements otherwise constitute a “conveyance, alienation, or hypothecation” of one of the § 106 6 exclusive rights.

7 3. The Agency Agreements Do Not Convey to Minden any Co-Ownership Interest in a 8 § 106 Exclusive Right

9 Conceding it is not an exclusive licensee, Minden relies instead on its power to issue licenses 10 under the agency agreement as evidence that the agency agreements convey an ownership interest.

11 For example, in its summary judgment motion, Minden asserts:

12 The power to grant licenses, like the licenses Wiley admits Minden 13 issued to Wiley, is an incident of copyright ownership – by definition, 14 only an owner may grant a third party to do what owners alone enjoy 15 the right to do.” Minden MSJ at 2.

15 Similarly, in its opposition to Wiley’s summary judgment motion, Minden contends:

16 “[T]he power to grant licenses is an unmistakable incident of 17 copyright ownership Many courts have therefore recognized two 18 related principles: (1) when a copyright owner – like each of the 19 photographers in this case – transfers the right to grant licenses to 20 someone like Minden, the transferee is necessarily an owner of 21 copyright with standing to sue; and by contrast, (2) a party who is 22 merely a nonexclusive licensee has no power to grant sublicenses.”
23 Minden Opp. at 8.

21 Accordingly, Minden rests its standing argument squarely on its power to authorize third parties to 22 reproduce, display, and distribute the images in question – i.e., to act as a licensing agent. The Court 23 concludes, however, that, taking the agency agreement as a whole, the agency agreement does not 24 convey to Minden an ownership interest in any § 106 exclusive right.

25 a. That Minden Has the Power to Authorize Third Parties to Exploit the Images 26 Does Not Make Minden a Co-Owner of any Exclusive Right § 106

27 Minden’s fundamental premise – that only a copyright owner or co-owner can have the 28 power to issue licenses or otherwise authorize third parties to exploit a copyrighted work – is

1 incorrect. Even a non-exclusive licensee – someone with no ownership interest at all⁴ (see 17 U.S.C.
2 § 101; see also Davis v. Blige, 505 F.3d 90 (2d Cir. 2007) (“A non-exclusive license conveys no 3 ownership interest”)) may issue sublicenses authorizing a third party to exploit a copyrighted 4 work if expressly authorized to do so by the copyright owner. See PlayMedia Sys., Inc. v. Am.
5 Online, Inc., 171 F. Supp. 2d 1094, 1099 (C.D. Cal. 2001) (“A non-exclusive license such as 6 Nullsoft/AOL has ‘no right to re-sell or sublicense the rights acquired unless he has been expressly 7 authorized to do so,” (quoting Harris v. Emus Records Corp., 734 F.2d 1329, 1333 (9th Cir. 1984)
8 (emphasis added)). Thus, the power to issue licenses can be exercised not only by a copyright 9 owner, but also by a properly authorized non-exclusive licensee (who by statute lacks an ownership 10 interest in a copyright). Accordingly, the fact that the agency agreements authorize Minden to issue 11 licenses to third parties does not establish Minden as a co-owner of the copyrights in those images.

12 More to the point, a number of courts have found that licensing agents are neither legal nor 13 beneficial owners of a copyright. See, e.g., Bourne Co. v. Hunter Country Club, Inc., 990 F.2d 934, 14 937 (7th Cir. 1993) (“A licensing agent is neither the legal nor the beneficial owners of the copyright 15 and has no interest in the copyright.”); Hulex Music v. C.F. Maint. & Prop. Mgmt., Inc., 115 F.R.D.
16 303, 304 (D. Neb. 1987) (holding that a licensing agent “is not the legal or beneficial owner of the 17 copyright”). Additionally, courts have refused to find standing under the Copyright Act even where 18 the plaintiff appeared to be the exclusive licensing agent. See Plunket v. Doyle, No. 99 CIV 11006 19 (KMW), 2001 WL 175252, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 22, 2001) (finding that a plaintiff who claimed to 20 have the “exclusive worldwide rights to manage, as well as to negotiate, license, and otherwise cause 21 and permit the exploitation” of all rights as to Arthur Conan Doyle’s works lacked standing under 22 the Copyright Act); Original Appalachian Artworks, Inc., 679 F. Supp. at 1572 (rejecting plaintiff’s 23 argument that the “exclusive right to authorize others to use OAA’s copyright must in itself be a 24 copyright within section 106 and, thus, protected by section 501”).

26
27 ⁴ A non-exclusive license is an arrangement in which the copyright owner does not convey 28 ownership of the copyright, but “simply permits the use of a copyrighted work in a particular manner.” I.A.E., Inc. v. Shaver, 74 F.3d 768, 775 (7th Cir. 1996).

1 In Premier Tracks, LLC v. Fox Broadcasting Co., No. 12-cv-01615 DMG, Dkt. No. 41 (C.D.
2 Cal. Dec. 18, 2012), the plaintiff had entered into written agreements with “the music libraries it 3 administers conferring to [it] exclusive copyright rights including exclusive rights to grant non-4 exclusive licenses” for the works to be used. Id. at 8. The district court found that plaintiff lacked 5 standing because “[t]he exclusive right to grant licenses for others to publicly perform or reproduce 6 a work is separate and distinct from the exclusive right to publicly perform or reproduce a work 7 itself.” Id. Accordingly, the court concluded that “licensing agents are not legal owners of section 8 106 exclusive rights and do not have standing to sue for copyright infringement.” Id. at 9.

9 The Court agrees with the reasoning in Premier Tracks and finds that the power to issue non-10 exclusive licenses authorizing third parties to exploit a copyright is not itself an exclusive right 11 under § 106. The right to license to others (in contrast, e.g., to the exclusive right to reproduce or 12 distribute the copyrighted work) is not an enumerated, exclusive right in § 106.

13 The main case upon which Minden relies in opposition to this point is not to the contrary. In 14 Warner/Chappell Music, Inc. v. Blue Moon Ventures, No. 3:10-1160, 2011 WL 662691 (M.D. Tenn.
15 Feb. 14, 2011), the district court, in the context of granting a preliminary injunction, found that the 16 plaintiff had standing under the Copyright Act. The agreement at issue was an “Exclusive 17 Administration Agreement” which provided, in part:

18 Although it is intended that we and our foreign subsidiaries, affiliates 19 and licensees have the fullest possible rights to (1) administer and 20 exploit the [Subject Compositions], utilize your name and approved likeness in connect therewith; (ii) grant non-exclusive life-of-copyright licenses for uses of the [Subject Compositions]

21 Id. at *5 (emphasis in original). The court found this language sufficient to establish standing: “The 22 language giving Plaintiff the right to administer and exploit the copyrights, as well as the ability to 23 further grant non-exclusive licenses gives them power of an exclusive licensee over at least two of 24 the six rights in section 106.” Id. The court continued: “the fact that Plaintiff is able to itself grant 25 nonexclusive licenses weighs in favor of the fact that they are beneficial owners of the copyrights in 26 question.” Id. This case is distinguishable on two grounds: first, as the court in Warner/Chappell
27 Music found, the plaintiff there was an exclusive licensee. While exclusive licenses are conveyances 28 of copyright ownership interests by statutory definition under § 101, Minden has conceded (as

1 discussed above), that the agency agreements are not exclusive licenses. Second, the plaintiff in 2 Blue Moon had not only the power to issue licenses, but the “fullest possible rights” to exploit the 3 compositions in question. Finally, the Blue Moon court held that while the power to grant 4 nonexclusive licenses “weighs in favor” of finding a beneficial ownership interest, it did not hold 5 that this power was sufficient on its own to find such an interest.

6 Furthermore, even if an exclusive right to issue licenses as an exclusive licensing agent were 7 sufficient to confer ownership, Minden had no such exclusive right. Minden concedes it does not 8 have the sole right to issue licenses (or to distribute, use, or otherwise exploit) the images in 9 question; it has acknowledged that photographers retain the rights to issue their own licenses. See 10 Dkt. No. 52, at 15:10-13 (“Well, in almost every case the photographer retained the right to sell his 11 own licenses, so they are not an exclusive – they don’t – Minden did not have an exclusive 12 license.”).

13 The Court’s conclusion that the agency agreements do not convey ownership is underscored 14 by the fact that a transfer of copyright ownership must be express and clear. See, e.g., Weinstein 15 Co., 664 F. Supp. 2d at 338 (S.D.N.Y. 2009); Bieg v. Hovnanian Enters., Inc., 157 F. Supp. 2d at 16 483. The Ninth Circuit has recognized that this requirement “forces parties to clarify their thinking” 17 and ensures that a “creator of a work will not give away his copyright inadvertently and forces a 18 party who wants to use the copyrighted work to negotiate with the creator to determine precisely 19 what rights are being transferred and at what price.” Effects Assocs., 908 F.2d at 557. Accordingly, 20 courts have declined to find transfers of ownership where the agreement in question was ambiguous.
21 See, e.g., Cassway v. Chelsea Historic Properties I, No. 92-4124, 1993 WL 64633 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 4, 22 1993) (“Where an ambiguity exists as to whether the copyright interest itself was transferred, the 23 court should construe such contractual provisions in favor of the author retaining his or her 24 copyright.”). Here, the only direct statement regarding copyright ownership in the agency 25 agreements themselves is the statement “[a]ll images shall at all times remain the sole and exclusive 26 property of the Photographer, including the copyright.” Under these circumstances, the Court finds 27 that Minden has failed to demonstrate a genuine dispute of material fact as to whether the agency 28 agreements represent clear, express transfers of a co-ownership interest in the images.

1 b. Minden is not a Co-Owner of an Exclusive Right in Copyrighted Words

2 To the extent Minden argues it is in effect a co-owner of an exclusive right in the 3 copyrighted works that are the subject of the agency agreements, that argument also fails. As the 4 Ninth Circuit recognized in Sybersound Records, Inc. v. UAV Corp., 517 F.3d 1137 (9th Cir. 2008), 5 “co-owners are like tenants in common, each owning a share of the undivided whole.” Id. at 1145.
6 The Ninth Circuit cited a House Report, part of the legislative history of the Copyright Act, which 7 stated that “[u]nder the bill, as under present law, co-owners of a copyright would be treated 8 generally as tenants in common, with each co-owner having an independent right to use or license 9 the use of a work, subject to a duty of accounting to the other co-owners for any profits.” H.R. Rep.
10 No. 94-1476, at 121 (1976), as reprinted in 1976 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5659, 5736. Thus, in Nafal v.
11 Carter, 540 F. Supp. 2d 1128 (C.D. Cal. 2007), aff’d 388 F. App’x 721 (9th Cir. 2010), the court 12 stated that “[i]n order to be considered a co-owner of an exclusive license, Plaintiff must in some 13 manner be similarly situated with respect to [the copyright owner], meaning that he has an 14 independent and equivalent power to exercise his rights in the License Agreement.” Id. at 1142.
15 Minden fails to establish the agency agreements confer upon it such independent and equivalent 16 rights; the photographers retain numerous important rights and control over Minden.

17 In the final analysis, Minden has simply failed to failed to demonstrate that the provisions of 18 the agency agreement do anything more than create a non-exclusive license. The Ninth Circuit 19 described licenses in the copyright context as follows:

20 Under our case law interpreting and applying the Copyright Act, too, it 21 is well settled that where a copyright owner transfers a copy of 22 copyrighted material, retains title, limits the uses to which the material may be put, and is compensated periodically based on the transferee’s exploitation of the material, the transaction is a license.

23 It is easily gleaned from these sources of federal copyright law that a 24 license is an authorization by the copyright owner to enable another 25 party to engage in behavior that would otherwise be the exclusive right of the copyright owner, but without transferring title in those rights.

26 F.B.T. Prods., LLC v. Aftermath Records, 621 F.3d 958, 965 (9th Cir 2010) (citations omitted). The 27 agency agreements fit squarely within this definition – they permit Minden to take actions they 28 otherwise would otherwise be the exclusive province of the copyright owner, (use copyrighted

1 images in their promotions, make duplicates of those images for purposes of distribution, authorize 2 third parties to exploit and use the images), allow Minden to use the images in this way subject to 3 certain limitations, and then provide for the copyright owner (the photographer) to be periodically 4 compensated for that use. At the same time, the agreements permit the photographer to continue his 5 or her own use of the photographs (including their own licensing activity).

6 4. Minden Is Not a “Beneficial Owner” of Any Exclusive Right

7 As noted above, Section 501 confers standing on a “beneficial owner” of an exclusive right.
8 The Copyright Act does not define what makes an individual the “beneficial owner” of a copyright.
9 The legislative history of the Act, however, provides one example – “a ‘beneficial owner’ . . . would 10 include, for example, an author who had parted with legal title to the copyright in exchange for 11 percentage royalties based on sales or license fees.” H.R. Rep. No. 94-1476, 94th Cong., 2d Sess.
12 159, reprinted in 1976 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 5569, 5575.

13 District courts in the Ninth Circuit have narrowly defined “beneficial owner” as being only 14 an individual who had legal title and parted with it in exchange for royalties. For example, in Ray 15 Charles Foundation v. Robinson, 919 F. Supp. 2d 1054 (C.D. Cal. 2013), the court stated that a 16 “‘beneficial owner’ is ‘an author who had parted with legal title to the copyright in exchange for 17 percentage royalties based on sales or license fees.’” (quoting Warren v. Fox Family Worldwide, 18 Inc., 328 F.3d 1136, 1144 (9th Cir. 2003)). Similarly, in Fantasy, Inc. v. Fogerty, 654 F. Supp. 1129
19 (N.D. Cal. 1987), Judge Conti noted that a “beneficial owner has transferred his exclusive rights 20 over the copyright’s use in exchange for an economic interest in proceeds derived from that use.”
21 Id. at 1131-32. Finally, in the Premier Tracks case cited above, Judge Gee stated that “the Ninth 22 Circuit has held that a beneficial owner can only be a former legal owner that assigned his exclusive 23 rights to another in return for royalties.” Premier Tracks, No. 12-CV-01615 DMG, Dkt. No. 41, at 24 9.

25 This narrow approach is also taken by at least one commentator on copyrights. See 2 Patry 26 on Copyright § 5:152 n.1 (“A beneficial owner must first have been a legal owner.”); see also id.
27 (“An author or other owner of copyright who transfers all of his or her exclusive rights may still be 28 considered a ‘beneficial owner’ if he or she retains an ongoing material financial interest in the

1 exploitation of the work.”). Nimmer on Copyright never expressly defines what a “beneficial 2 owner” is, but states that “[p]resumably, reference is intended to the general law of trusts in this 3 regard.” 3 Nimmer on Copyright § 12.02[D].

4 Minden is not a “beneficial owner” in the images since it is not nor has it been a legal owner 5 of the copyrighted works.

6 B. Wiley Is Not Estopped from Challenging Minden’s Alleged Copyright Ownership

7 Minden argues that Wiley is estopped from challenging Minden’s ownership because Wiley 8 admits it received licenses from Minden to use the photographs and in fact has raised these licenses 9 as an affirmative defense to Minden’s infringement claims. Minden MSJ at 27. This argument is 10 without merit. As discussed above, if properly authorized by the copyright owner, a non-exclusive 11 licensee may issue grant sublicenses. See, e.g., 2 Patry on Copyright § 5:127 (“Since a nonexclusive 12 licensee is not a copyright owner, it may not . . . absent authorization, sublicense.”). This does not 13 change the fact, however, that a non-exclusive licensee does not have standing under the Copyright 14 Act. Here, the agency agreements in question clearly convey on Minden the authority to issue 15 licenses to use the photographer’s photos. Accordingly, there is no inconsistency in Wiley asserting 16 that the licenses issued from Minden are valid and form the basis of an affirmative defense while at 17 the same time arguing that Minden is not a co-owner of an exclusive right under the Copyright Act 18 for purposes of standing.

19 C. The Photographers Will Not Be Permitted to “Ratify” this Action

20 Minden argues that if the Court concludes there is no standing, the Court cannot dismiss the 21 action under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17, but rather must find that the photographers have 22 ratified the filing of this action by executing the “subsequent assignments” that were executed after 23 the filing of this lawsuit. Dkt. No. 69, at 24. Minden is incorrect.

24 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(a)(3) provides:

25 (3) Joinder of the Real Party in Interest. The court may not dismiss 26 an action for failure to prosecute in the name of the real party in 27 interest until, after an objection, a reasonable time has been allowed 28 for the real party in interest to ratify, join, or be substituted into the action. After ratification, joinder, or substitution, the action proceeds as if it had been originally commenced by the real party in interest.
