Case No. 16-cv-00768-WHO

ORDER DENYING MOTION TO DISMISS AND STRIKE

Re: Dkt. No. 19

12 INTRODUCTION

13 Plaintiff James Knapp brings this putative class action against defendant Art.com, Inc.
14 (“Art.com”), accusing it of violating California’s consumer protection laws by conducting 15 “perpetual sales” that deceive consumers into believing that they are receiving significant bargains 16 on Art.com’s merchandise, when in fact they are not. Art.com moves to dismiss or strike certain 17 portions of Knapp’s first amended complaint (“FAC”). Knapp has not plausibly alleged that 18 Art.com’s advertising falls within the scope of 15 U.S.C. § 52(a), and his claim based on that 19 statute is DISMISSED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND. In all other respects, Art.com’s motion is 20 DENIED.

21 BACKGROUND

22 I. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

23 Art.com is a California corporation headquartered in Emeryville, California. FAC ¶ 6 24 (Dkt. No. 6). It owns and operates several online commerce websites selling posters and other 25 home décor products, including www.art.com, www.posters.com, and www.allposters.com. Id. ¶¶ 26 1-2.

27 On October 11, 2015, Knapp was browsing www.art.com in search of a piece of framed 28 artwork. Id. ¶ 61. He saw an item he liked but was “not immediately prepared to purchase [it],”

1 until he saw that there was a 40% off sale ending at midnight that day. Id. “Enticed by the idea of 2 saving 40% off his purchase,” Knapp decided to purchase the item. Id. In placing his order, he 3 entered an optional coupon code, which triggered the 40 percent discount off the non-sale price of 4 $172.99. Id. at fig. 16.

5 The next day, shortly after midnight, the sale at www.art.com “automatically renewed,” 6 although this time at a discount of 45 percent instead of 40 percent. Id. ¶ 62. Knapp states that he 7 “was induced to purchase the product at ‘40% off’ because he believed that the sale was ending 8 that day,” and that he “would not have purchased the product if it were not for the ‘40% off sale’ 9 advertised on the www.art.com website.” Id. He also states that “[h]ad [he] waited until just after 10 midnight – when the sale that induced him to make the purchase ended – he could have gotten 11 ‘45% off’ the product he purchased.” Id.

12 Knapp accuses Art.com of conducting “perpetual sales” on www.art.com, as well as 13 www.posters.com and www.allposters.com (collectively, the “accused websites”). Id. ¶ 31. He 14 alleges that the sales (1) are “automatically generate[d]” such that they run back-to-back with 15 “zero lag time between the end of one sales and the beginning of another,” (2) consistently offer 16 discounts ranging from 30 to 50 percent; and (3) are “prominently advertise[d]” on each of the 17 accused websites with language such as “40% OFF EVERYTHING* ENDS TODAY” or “45% 18 OFF ALL ORDERS* – TODAY ONLY.” Id. ¶¶ 38, 48-49. He also notes that in connection with 19 each sale, the accused websites provide a six-character coupon code which consumers “enter at the 20 time of checkout in order to take advantage of the purported sale.” Id. ¶ 34. Knapp contends that 21 Art.com’s sales are “designed to falsely induce consumers to purchase their products under the 22 mistaken belief that they are getting a significant bargain,” and that the sales “deceive consumers 23 into believing they are being offered a discount from Art.com’s regular prices when, in fact, they 24 are not.” Id. ¶¶ 31, 38.<sup>1</sup>

25 II. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

26 Knapp filed his original complaint on February 16, 2016 and his FAC on March 23, 2016.

<sup>1</sup> Each party’s unopposed request for judicial notice is GRANTED. See Dkt. Nos. 19-8, 22.

1 Dkt. Nos. 1, 6. He asserts four causes of action against Art.com: (1) violation of California’s 2 False Advertising Law (“FAL”), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq.; (2) violation of the 3 unfair and unlawful prongs of California’s Unfair Competition Law (“UCL”), Cal. Bus. & Prof.
4 Code § 17200 et seq.; (3) violation of California’s Consumer Legal Remedies Act (“CLRA”), Cal.
5 Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.; and (4) unjust enrichment and common law restitution. FAC ¶¶ 77-112.

6 He seeks to represent a class defined as 7 All natural persons located within the United States who purchased 8 any product online from Art.com through the e-commerce websites, 9 www.art.com, www.posters.com, and/or www.allposters.com, at 10 any time beginning four (4) years prior to the filing of this action on 11 February 16, 2016, and ending at the time this action settles or 12 proceeds to final judgment.

13 Id. ¶ 65.

14 Art.com filed its motion to dismiss and strike on May 2, 2016. Dkt. No. 19 (“Mot.”).
15 Art.com does not seek to dismiss or strike Knapp’s FAC in its entirety. Art.com’s arguments are 16 limited to (1) the first cause of action for violation of the FAL, and (2) certain aspects of the 17 second cause of action for violation of the UCL. See, e.g., Mot. at 1-4. I heard argument from the 18 parties on June 8, 2016. Dkt. No. 29.

19 LEGAL STANDARD

20 I. RULE 12(b)(6): MOTION TO DISMISS FOR FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM

21 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2) requires a complaint to contain “a short and plain 22 statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief,” Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2), in 23 order to “give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests,” 24 Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555 (2007) (internal quotation marks and alterations 25 omitted).

26 A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 27 12(b)(6) tests the legal sufficiency of a complaint. Navarro v. Block, 250 F.3d 729, 732 (9th Cir.
28 2001). “Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) is appropriate only where the complaint lacks a cognizable legal theory or sufficient facts to support a cognizable legal theory.” Mendiondo v. Centinela Hosp. Med. Ctr., 521 F.3d 1097, 1104 (9th Cir. 2008). While a complaint “need not contain

1 detailed factual allegations” to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, “it must plead enough facts to state 2 a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.” Cousins v. Lockyer, 568 F.3d 1063, 1067-68 (9th
3 Cir. 2009) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). A claim is facially plausible when it 4 “allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct 5 alleged.” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (internal quotation marks omitted).

6 In considering whether a claim satisfies this standard, the court must “accept factual 7 allegations in the complaint as true and construe the pleadings in the light most favorable to the 8 nonmoving party.” Manzarek v. St. Paul Fire & Marines Ins. Co., 519 F.3d 1025, 1031 (9th Cir.
9 2008). However, “conclusory allegations of law and unwarranted inferences are insufficient to 10 avoid a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal.” Cousins, 568 F.3d at 1067 (internal quotation marks omitted). A 11 court may “reject, as implausible, allegations that are too speculative to warrant further factual 12 development.” Dahlia v. Rodriguez, 735 F.3d 1060, 1076 (9th Cir. 2013).

13 II. RULE 9(b): HEIGHTENED PLEADING STANDARD FOR FRAUD OR MISTAKE

14 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) requires that claims sounding in fraud or mistake 15 “state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).<sup>2</sup> To 16 satisfy this standard, a plaintiff must identify “the time, place, and content of [the] alleged 17 misrepresentation[s],” as well as the “circumstances indicating falseness” or “manner in which the 18 representations at issue were false and misleading.” In re GlenFed Inc. Sec. Litig., 42 F.3d 1541, 19 1547-48 (9th Cir. 1994) (internal quotation marks and alterations omitted). “In other words, the 20 plaintiff must set forth an explanation as to why the statement or omission complained of was 21 false or misleading.” Siegel v. Lyons, No. 95-cv-03588-DLJ, 1996 WL 438793, at *3 (N.D.Cal.
22 Apr. 26, 1996) (internal quotation marks omitted). The allegations of fraud “must be specific 23 enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the 24 fraud charged so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done 25 anything wrong.” Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 764 (9th Cir. 2007).

26

<sup>2</sup> Knapp’s claims sound in fraud and are thus subject to Rule 9(b). See Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1125 (9th Cir. 2009); Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1103-04 (9th Cir. 2003).

1 (2) “that the advertised ‘original’ or ‘regular’ prices did not reflect prevailing retail market 2 prices”); 16 C.F.R. § 233.1(a) (an advertised “reduction from the advertiser’s own former price for 3 an article” is legitimate where “the former price is the actual, bona fide price at which the article 4 was offered to the public on a regular basis for a reasonably substantial period of time”) (emphasis 5 added). In line with the second of these two scenarios, California Business & Professions Code 6 section 17501 provides that “[n]o price shall be advertised as a former price of any advertised 7 thing, unless the alleged former price was the prevailing market price . . . within three months next 8 immediately preceding the publication of the advertisement or unless the date when the alleged 9 former price did prevail is clearly, exactly and conspicuously stated in the advertisement.” Cal.
10 Bus. & Prof. Code § 17501.

11 Knapp’s FAL cause of action cites to both section 17500 and 17501 and alleges that 12 Art.com’s “perpetual sales” are deceptive in that they “mislead consumers into believing they are 13 getting a significant discount, when in actuality, they are paying the regular or even greater price 14 for the item they are purchasing.” FAC ¶¶ 78-80.

15 Art.com moves to dismiss the FAL cause of action on the grounds that (1) it is based 16 exclusively on section 17501, not section 17500, and Knapp has not adequately alleged either that 17 Art.com’s advertised sales involve “former price” advertising within the meaning of section 18 17501, or that any advertised former price was not the “prevailing market price” at the relevant 19 time, Mot. at 12-16; and (2) Knapp lacks statutory standing under section 17501, both because he 20 does not specifically allege that he believed that the “40% off” language he viewed was a former 21 price comparison, and because his only claimed harm is that “he did not know that Art.com would 22 offer a better sale the next day,” Mot. at 19-21.

23 These arguments do not support dismissing the FAL cause of action (or striking from it all 24 references to section 17501, as Art.com requests in the alternative, see Reply at 9). First, the cause 25 of action is not based exclusively on section 17501. Knapp cites to both section 17501 and section 26 17500 within the FAL cause of action, see FAC ¶¶ 78, 80, and the bulk of his allegations are 27 directed at the theory that Art.com’s “perpetual sales” have caused its purported sale prices to be 28 no different from the prices at which it regularly sells its products. As I understand the interaction

1 between section 17501 and section 17500, this is a section 17500 theory, not a section 17501
2 theory. That is, Knapp’s principal theory of liability appears to be that Art.com does not 3 ordinarily sell its products at the advertised regular prices (in violation of section 17500), not that 4 the advertised regular prices are out of step with prevailing market prices (in violation of section 5 17501).

6 Further, even if the FAL cause of action were limited to section 17501, the allegations in 7 the FAC are sufficient to state a claim under that statute. Art.com argues that section 17501 does 8 not apply because Knapp does not “identify any advertising by Art.com that uses any language 9 denoting a former price,” such as words like “formerly” or “regularly.” Mot. at 13-14. But 10 Art.com cites no authority indicating that such language is required. Each of the cases it cites 11 rejected former price comparison claims based on “Compare At” or “Compared To” advertising.
12 See Jacobo v. Ross Stores, Inc., No. 15-cv-04701, at *2, *9 (C.D. Cal. Feb. 23, 2016) (dismissing 13 claim that the defendant violated section 17501 by advertising a sale price and a “Compare At” 14 price representing the amount charged for similar products by other merchants in the area); Branca 15 v. Nordstrom, Inc., No. 14-cv-02062, 2015 WL 1841231, at *7-8 (S.D. Cal. Mar. 20, 2015) 16 (dismissing claim that “the ‘Compare At’ price listed on the Nordstrom Rack price tags . . . is 17 likely to deceive reasonable consumers into believing the listed ‘Compare At’ price is the former 18 price at which Nordstrom or other retailers previously sold the same merchandise”); Rubenstein v.
19 Neiman Marcus Grp. LLC, No. 14-cv-07155, 2015 WL 1841254, at *3, *5-6 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 2, 20 2015) (rejecting claim that the “Compared To” advertising used at the defendant’s outlet store 21 could be “interpreted by reasonable consumers to be a price comparison with the price of the exact 22 same product when it was previously for sale at [the] defendant’s regular retail store”). The 23 language at issue here – e.g., “40% off” or “45% OFF ALL ORDERS* – TODAY ONLY” – is 24 substantially different, and substantially more indicative of a former price comparison than 25 “Compare At” or “Compare To.” A reasonable consumer does not need language such as, 26 “Formerly $9.99, Now 40% Off $9.99,” or, “40% Off the Former Price of $9.99,” to reasonably 27
28

1 understand “40% off” to mean 40% off the former price of the product.<sup>3</sup>

2 Art.com contends that the section 17501 claim fails because Knapp does not specifically 3 allege that he interpreted the “40% off” language he viewed as a former price comparison. Mot. at 4 14. But Knapp alleges that he “noticed the 40% off sale,” “saw that the sale ended at midnight,” 5 and was “[e]nticed by the idea of saving 40% off his purchase.” FAC ¶ 61. Elsewhere in the 6 FAC, he alleges that Art.com’s purported sales “deceive consumers into believing they are being 7 offered a discount from Art.com’s regular prices when, in fact, they are not.” Id. ¶ 31. Viewed in 8 the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, these allegations are sufficient to plausibly
9 establish that Knapp interpreted the “40% off” language as advertising a discount from Art.com’s 10 former prices. Indeed, it is not clear how else Knapp could have reasonably understood the “40% 11 language” other than as advertising a discount from Art.com’s former prices.

12 Art.com asserts that section 17501 does not apply because Art.com’s sales require 13 consumers to enter a coupon code to obtain the advertised sale price, meaning that its sales merely 14 compare “two current prices” – i.e., the coupon price and the non-coupon price – not a former 15 non-sale price and a current sale price. Mot. at 13; see also id. at 14 (“Because the alleged regular 16 price is offered simultaneously with the discounted sale price and the customer can pay the regular 17 price to purchase the item, the alleged regular price is not a former price.”). I am not convinced.
18 Knapp has plausibly alleged that the “40% off” language he viewed objectively qualifies as former 19 price advertising within the meaning of section 17501, and that he subjectively interpreted the 20 language as advertising a discount from Art.com’s former prices. Against this backdrop, it is not 21 clear why it matters that he was required to enter a coupon code to obtain the advertised 40 percent

22 _____
23 <sup>3</sup> The “Former Price Comparison” regulation issued by the Federal Trade Commission, which both 24 Branca and Rubenstein cite in their analysis, adds further support to the conclusion that language 25 such as “formerly” or “regularly” is not required. The regulation explains that “[i]f the former 26 price is set forth in the advertisement, whether accompanied or not by descriptive terminology 27 such as ‘Regularly,’ ‘Usually,’ ‘Formerly,’ etc., the advertiser should make certain that the former 28 price is not a fictitious one.” 16 C.F.R. § 233.1(e) (emphasis added). In addition, a regulation interpreting section 17501 issued by the California Bureau of Electronic and Appliance Repair, Home Furnishings and Thermal Insulation lists “___% off” – the same language used by Art.com
– as an example of former price advertising under section 17501. See Cal. Code Regs. tit. 4 § 1301 (“The term ‘former price’ as used in [section 17501] includes but is not limited to the following words and phrases when used in connection with advertised prices: “formerly -,” “regularly -,” “usually -,” “originally -,” “reduced from ___,” “was ___ now ___,” “___% off.”).

1 discount. As described in the FAC, the requirement that a consumer enter a coupon code to obtain 2 the advertised discount is merely a routine, procedural step in the purchase transaction and is not 3 material to whether Art.com’s advertising constitutes former price advertising under section 4 17501.<sup>4</sup>

5 Art.com’s argument that Knapp has not adequately alleged that any advertised former price 6 was higher than the prevailing market price is also unpersuasive. Art.com faults Knapp for not 7 “identify[ing] any prices charged by other retailers.” Reply at 9. Given that Knapp has plausibly 8 alleged that Art.com consistently sells its products at prices significantly (i.e., 30 to 50 percent) 9 lower than its advertised former prices, Knapp does not need to identify prices charged by other 10 retailers to plausibly establish that Art.com’s advertised former prices are higher than prevailing 11 market prices. The alternative inference is that Art.com consistently sells its products at prices 30 12 to 50 percent lower than prevailing market prices. Art.com does not identify any reasonable basis 13 for this inference.

14 This leaves Art.com’s attacks on Knapp’s statutory standing under section 17501. As 15 discussed above, Knapp has plausibly alleged that he understood the “40% off” language as 16 advertising a discount from Art.com’s former prices. And while Knapp states that he could have 17 received an even larger discount had he waited one more day to make his purchase, he also states 18 that he “would not have purchased the product if it were not for the ‘40% off sale’ advertised on 19 the www.art.com website.” FAC ¶ 62. This latter allegation is sufficient to establish statutory 20 standing under section 17501, even assuming that the former is not. See Hinojos v. Kohl’s Corp., 21 718 F.3d 1098, 1107 (9th Cir. 2013) (“[W]hen a consumer purchases merchandise on the basis of 22

23 <sup>4</sup> Moreover, I am skeptical that section 17501 cannot be applied to a comparison between a current 24 coupon price and a current non-coupon price, merely because both prices are currently available to 25 consumers. Art.com cites no on-point authority to support its position that a former price under 26 section 17501 must be one that is not currently offered, and thus cannot be a currently offered 27 “regular” or “non-sale” price. The cases cited by Art.com hold that “comparable value 28 comparisons” – i.e., advertising comparing the advertiser’s price to that of “merchandise of like grade and quality . . . sold by the advertiser or others in the area” – are distinct from former price comparisons. See Branca, 2015 WL 1841231, at *7-8; Rubenstein, 2015 WL 1841254, at *5-6.
They do not address whether a comparison between an advertiser’s current coupon price on an item and its current non-coupon price on the same item qualifies as former price advertising under section 17501.

1 false price information, and when the consumer alleges that he would not have made the purchase 2 but for the misrepresentation, he has standing to sue under the UCL and FAL because he has 3 suffered an economic injury.”).

4 Knapp’s claims under section 17500 and section 17501 may proceed. Art.com’s motion to 5 dismiss or strike the FAL cause of action is DENIED.

6 II. SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION: VIOLATION OF THE UCL

7 Knapp brings claims under the unlawful and unfair prongs of the UCL.<sup>5</sup> FAC ¶¶ 83-96.
8 His claims under the unlawful prong are based on Art.com’s alleged violations of section 17501, 9 16 C.F.R. § 233.1(a),<sup>6</sup> 15 U.S.C. § 52(a),<sup>7</sup> and California Civil Code sections 1770(a)(9) and 10 (a)(13).<sup>8</sup> Id. ¶¶ 90-94. In support of his claim under the unfair prong, he accuses Art.com of 11 “misrepresenting a false sale price to induce consumers into believing they are getting a discount, 12 when they are not,” thereby “induc[ing] reasonable consumers . . . to buy Art.com merchandise,

14 <sup>5</sup> In his opposition brief, Knapp contends that he has also brought claims under the UCL’s 15 fraudulent prong. Oppo. at 20. That is not how I read the FAC. If Knapp wants to bring claims 16 under the fraudulent prong, he should include allegations to that effect in a second amended 17 complaint.

18 <sup>6</sup> Section 233.1(a) explains that 19 One of the most commonly used forms of bargain advertising is to 20 offer a reduction from the advertiser's own former price for an 21 article. If the former price is the actual, bona fide price at which the 22 article was offered to the public on a regular basis for a reasonably 23 substantial period of time, it provides a legitimate basis for the 24 advertising of a price comparison. Where the former price is 25 genuine, the bargain being advertised is a true one. If, on the other 26 hand, the former price being advertised is not bona fide but fictitious 27 – for example, where an artificial, inflated price was established for 28 the purpose of enabling the subsequent offer of a large reduction – the “bargain” being advertised is a false one; the purchaser is not receiving the unusual value he expects. In such a case, the “reduced” price is, in reality, probably just the seller's regular price.

16 C.F.R. § 233.1(a).

<sup>7</sup> Section 52(a) prohibits the dissemination of false advertisements relating to the purchase of “food, drugs, devices, services, or cosmetics.” 15 U.S.C. § 52(a).

<sup>8</sup> Sections 1770(a)(9) and 1770(a)(13) prohibit “[a]dvertising goods or services with intent not to sell them as advertised,” Cal. Civ. Code § 1770(a)(9), and “[m]aking false or misleading statements of fact concerning reasons for, existence of, or amounts of price reductions,” Cal. Civ.
Code § 1770(a)(13).

1 which they otherwise would not have purchased.” Id. ¶¶ 87-88.

2 Art.com moves to strike (1) Knapp’s unlawful prong claims to the extent that they are 3 based on section 17501, section 233.1(a), or section 52(a); and (2) the entirety of Knapp’s claim 4 under the unfair prong. Mot. at 21-23; Reply at 13-15. Art.com does not explain why it is 5 appropriate to strike (as opposed to dismiss) any portion of Knapp’s UCL cause of action at this 6 juncture, and I construe this portion of its motion as a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6).

7 So construed, the motion is GRANTED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND with respect to 8 Knapp’s unlawful prong claim based on section 52(a). That statute is limited to false 9 advertisements relating to the purchase of “food, drugs, devices, services, or cosmetics.” 15 10 U.S.C. § 52(a); see also 15 U.S.C. § 55 (defining “food,” “drug,” “device,” and “cosmetic”).
11 Knapp does not explain how Art.com’s advertising falls within this scope, and instead concedes 12 that section 52(a) “may not be applicable here.” Oppo. at 17 n.5. Because the allegations in the 13 FAC do not support a plausible inference that Art.com has violated section 52(a), Knapp may not 14 base an unlawful prong claim on that statute.

15 In all other respects, Art.com’s motion is DENIED. The rest of Art.com’s attacks on 16 Knapp’s claims under the UCL’s unlawful and unfair prongs largely overlap with its arguments 17 regarding the FAL cause of action, discussed above, and fail for essentially the same reasons. See 18 Mot. at 21-23; Reply at 13-15. Knapp’s claims under the unlawful prong based on section 17501, 19 section 233.1(a), and sections 1770(a)(9) and 1770(a)(13), and his claim under the unfair prong, 20 may proceed.

21 CONCLUSION

22 For the foregoing reasons, Art.com’s motion to dismiss and strike is GRANTED IN PART 23 and DENIED IN PART. Knapp’s claims under the UCL’s unlawful prong are DISMISSED 24 WITH LEAVE TO AMEND to the extent that they are based on section 52(a). Knapp has not 25 stated a claim under the UCL’s fraudulent prong. In all other respects, Art.com’s motion is 26 DENIED. Knapp may file a second amended complaint within 20 days of the date of this Order.
27 If he chooses not to file a second amended complaint, Art.com shall file its answer within 20 days 28 of the date of his notice filed in the Court’s docket on ECF that he will not file a second amended
