For the Northern District of California

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

LUIS ANTONIO AGUIRRE,
Petitioner,
v.
RAYMOND MADDEN,
Respondent.

No. C 17-05232 WHA

ORDER DENYING PETITION FOR WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS

INTRODUCTION

Petitioner Luis Antonio Aguirre is a state prisoner serving a sentence of 90-years-to-life consecutive to an additional 64-year term of imprisonment. He seeks federal habeas corpus relief pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2254 on the grounds that the trial court violated due process by admitting his purportedly involuntary confession. He also claims that his lawyer’s failure to seek exclusion of his confession at trial denied him effective assistance of counsel. For the reasons stated below, the petition is DENIED.

STATEMENT

In 2011, prosecutors filed a felony criminal complaint and information against petitioner Luis Antonio Aguirre in the Superior Court of California, County of Santa Clara, alleging that petitioner repeatedly molested his step-granddaughter, Kassandra Doe, between 1998 and 2004 when Kassandra was between the ages of seven and 12 years old. Shortly before trial in 2013, the prosecution filed an amended information alleging 12 counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child under 14 years of age and 12 counts of forcible lewd acts upon a child. Following trial,

1 a jury found petitioner guilty of multiple of the charged counts. The trial court sentenced 2 petitioner to 90 years-to-life in prison consecutive to an additional 64-year term of 3 imprisonment (CT 1–42, 1038–46).

4 Petitioner timely appealed. On appeal, petitioner argued that the trial court erred in 5 admitting a recorded statement that petitioner had made to police in 2011. He argued that the 6 statement had been made involuntarily and was therefore inadmissible against him. In the 7 alternative, petitioner argued that he was denied effective assistance of counsel based on his 8 counsel’s failure to object to the trial court’s admission of the evidence (Dkt. No. 10-12 Exhs.
9 C–E). The state appellate court summarized the circumstances of petitioner’s statement to the 10 police as follows (People v. Aguirre, No. H041415, 2016 WL 3679901 (Cal. Ct. App. July 6, 11 2016)):

12 Detectives Angel Mina and Tina LaTendresse of the San Jose Police Department 13 interrogated petitioner following his arrest in October 2011. During the interrogation, the 14 detectives provided the following false information to petitioner: (1) Kassandra had undergone 15 a physical examination when she was younger; (2) police had medical records from when 16 Kassandra was younger; (3) when a child has sexual intercourse, it causes scarring; (4) 17 Kassandra had scarring due to sexual intercourse as a child; (5) Kassandra kept clothing from 18 when she was a little girl; (6) a sample of petitioner’s DNA, which was obtained during the 19 interrogation, had been analyzed; and (7) petitioner’s DNA was on Kassandra’s clothing.
20 Detective Mina also testified at trial that she showed petitioner a false DNA report during the 21 interrogation.

22 The recorded interrogation began around 10:00 a.m. Petitioner waived his Miranda 23 rights. The detectives began by asking petitioner background questions and offering him food.
24 They asked petitioner if he had any idea why he was being questioned, to which he responded 25 that it may be related to a phone call he received from Kassandra, who had recently accused 26 him of “sexual harassment” when she was a child. When the detectives asked petitioner what 27 sort of sexual harassment Kassandra had alleged during the phone call, he said he had never 28

1 touched Cassandra and that when she was a child she would “go crazy” and “jump all over”
2 him. He elaborated that Cassandra would “rub” him and “hug” him.

3 After petitioner gave the detectives permission to extract a DNA sample from his mouth, 4 the detectives falsely said that DNA “can stay on clothing” and “can stay inside the body” for 5 “years.” Detective LaTendresse falsely told petitioner that Cassandra “had an exam when she 6 was younger,” “some things were found,” and that was why they wanted a sample of 7 petitioner’s DNA. Detective LaTendresse also falsely told petitioner that Cassandra “kept her 8 clothing when she was a little girl” and asked if there was “any reason why [petitioner’s] DNA 9 would be on any of her clothing.” He responded, “No, no, no.”

10 After about an hour, the detectives offered petitioner water, coffee, and food and gave 11 him a break from questioning. After about five minutes, the detectives returned and again 12 offered petitioner food before swabbing the inside of his cheek. After obtaining the swabs, 13 Detective Mina said, “We’re gonna drop these off.” The detectives left the room at 11:15 a.m.
14 and resumed questioning at 11:29 a.m. Immediately upon resuming the questioning, Detective 15 Mina asked petitioner if he was “okay.” He responded, “Yeah.” Detective Mina told petitioner 16 that she “[did]n’t want to be disrespectful.” She reminded petitioner that his house had been 17 searched by police and informed him that there was “enough evidence against” him to search 18 his house and question him. Detective Mina advised petitioner “to be honest,” and he continued 19 to deny touching Cassandra. After Detective Mina said she would “not listen to any more lies,” 20 petitioner told the detectives that “sometime” he removed Cassandra’s underwear “[f]rom the 21 dirty clothes” and licked them. He explained that he did so because “she used to come and grab 22 and hug [him] hard.”

23 Detective Mina asked petitioner what he did after he licked the underwear, in response 24 to which he insisted that he “didn’t do anything.” Detective Mina said, “I’m in charge now,” 25 again advising petitioner to “tell the truth.” She reminded him that the “stuff is at the lab,” and 26 informed him falsely that DNA “doesn’t go away after a year, two years, five years.” Petitioner 27 continued to deny touching Cassandra in a sexual manner. Detective Mina accused petitioner 28 of lying, informed him that police “seized a bunch of stuff from [his] house,” and advised him

1 that he could not “make this go away” because police had his DNA. Detective LaTendresse 2 also stated:

3 I believe that this is not all your fault. I believe that this — I’ve 4 seen this young lady. I know she’s very attractive. And she 5 probably was very attractive as [a] — girl, okay. And she 6 probably had some curiosities and she may have been interested in 7 you in that way . . . . And I can understand how you could be 8 attracted to her because she probably came on to you, okay. But 9 we understand that. The big thing is, Luis, we just want to know 10 the truth of what happened and why. That’s it. We know what 11 happened. But we want you to tell us what happened.

12 Petitioner continued to deny touching Cassandra and denied any attraction to her.
13 Detective Mina reminded petitioner about licking Cassandra’s underwear and falsely told him 14 that DNA “[i]n the mouth” is “[n]ot the same.” Petitioner responded that he “didn’t do sex to 15 her.” He then stated that Cassandra sat on his lap in the jacuzzi, she did “a lot of crazy stuff,” 16 and semen “might” have leaked from his penis.

17 Detective LaTendresse told petitioner to “get it off [his] chest.” He responded that 18 Cassandra was “attractive” and “[s]he go crazy.” He said that he was “so stupid,” but continued 19 to insist that he “didn’t do her sexual.” When Officer Mina asked petitioner what he had done, 20 he stated that Cassandra sat in his lap and tried to grab his “thing.” He emphasized that he 21 never “penetrate[d]” Cassandra. When Detective LaTendresse asked if he ever put his penis 22 inside Cassandra’s vagina, petitioner stated, “No, never, no.” The detectives told petitioner that 23 “there was some type of contact” between his penis and Cassandra and asked him to explain 24 “what it was.” Defendant admitted that he put his leg on top of Cassandra’s legs and that his 25 penis “was leaking through” his underwear. He stated, “[I]t might be some DNA because I was 26 leaking.” He continued to emphasize, however, that he “didn’t sexual her.” Detective Mina 27 informed petitioner that his wife saw him rub his penis against Cassandra and asked if his wife 28 was lying. Petitioner stated that Cassandra “went crazy” on his leg “like she was doing sex.”
He also stated that Cassandra would “go on top” of his penis when he was clothed and do “horsy riding.”

The detectives then showed petitioner an envelope and said, “This is the DNA stuff.”
The detectives accused petitioner of penetrating Cassandra, explaining falsely that the “lab

1 results” showed that Kassandra had vaginal scarring “from when she was younger.” They also 2 falsely stated that petitioner’s semen was found inside Kassandra’s vagina. Petitioner
3 responded that he “didn’t penetrate her.” Detective Mina falsely told petitioner, “[T]here’s 4 DNA from your fingers insider her too.” Petitioner denied touching Kassandra with his hands 5 and repeatedly denied penetrating Kassandra. The detectives again offered petitioner coffee and 6 water and gave him a break from questioning at 12:34 p.m.

7 The detectives resumed their questioning at 1:13 p.m. Detective Mina asked petitioner 8 if he tried to get Kassandra to perform oral sex. He said, “No.” Detective LaTendresse then 9 advised petitioner that she and Detective Mina were going to ask him some questions to “make 10 sure” the detectives “didn’t disrespect” him during the interrogation. When the detectives asked 11 petitioner how he felt when they accused him of lying, he stated that he felt “relief in [his] 12 chest.” Detective LaTendresse asked petitioner, “Were we respectful to you?” He responded, 13 “Oh, no, no, no, no. No, you do your job. You did a great job.” Detective LaTendresse then 14 asked, “We treated you okay?” He replied, “Oh, yeah . . . . Everything good.” The 15 interrogation ended at 1:42 p.m. A video of the interrogation was played for the jury.

16 The California Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment in an unpublished decision in 17 July 2016, concluding that petitioner’s confession was voluntary and declining to reach 18 petitioner’s alternative argument that his trial counsel was ineffective in his failure to object to 19 the confession’s admission. The California Supreme Court summarily denied petitioner’s 20 petition for review. This federal habeas petition followed (Dkt. Nos. 1, 10).

21 ANALYSIS

22 The Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA), 28 U.S.C. §
23 2254, applies to petitioner’s case. Under AEDPA, federal courts may grant a writ of habeas 24 corpus only if the state-court ruling “resulted in a decision that was contrary to, or involved an 25 unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme 26 Court of the United States” or “was based on an unreasonable determination of the facts in light 27 of the evidence presented in the State court proceeding.” 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d). Where, as here, 28 the California Supreme Court denied review of petitioner’s direct appeal without comment, the

1 Court must look to the last reasoned decision, the state appellate court’s decision, as the basis
2 for the state court’s judgment. Shackleford v. Hubbard, 234 F.3d 1072, 1079 n.2 (9th Cir.
3 2000).

4 Petitioner’s primary claim in this federal habeas petition is that the admission of his 5 confession at trial denied him due process because the statement was involuntary. He argues, as 6 he did on appeal, that two elements of the detectives’ tactics amounted to coercion: (1) the 7 detectives falsely claimed to have physical evidence against him, including DNA evidence, and 8 (2) the detectives suggested that petitioner’s alleged crimes were mitigated by Cassandra’s own 9 behavior.

10 A defendant is deprived of due process if his conviction is founded upon an involuntary 11 confession. Lego v. Twomey, 404 U.S. 477, 485 (1972). “A confession is involuntary if it is not 12 ‘the product of a rational intellect and a free will.’” Brown v. Horell, 644 F.3d 969, 979 (9th 13 Cir. 2011) (citation omitted). To determine whether a confession was involuntary, courts must 14 consider the totality of the circumstances, including the length, location, and continuity of the 15 interrogation; the defendant’s maturity, education, physical condition, and mental health; 16 whether the defendant was advised of his rights; and whether counsel was present. Withrow v.
17 Williams, 507 U.S. 680, 693 (1993). The fact that the police misrepresented the amount of 18 evidence against a defendant is, while relevant, insufficient to make an otherwise voluntary 19 confession inadmissible. Frazier v. Cupp, 394 U.S. 731, 739 (1969).

20 An officer’s outright lies about the existence of evidence against an interrogatee must be 21 examined with great care, as they can easily cause someone to conform their story to the 22 officer’s lies. Following a careful examination, this order nevertheless concludes that the state 23 court of appeal’s totality of the circumstances analysis was not an unreasonable application of 24 federal law. As noted in the appellate court’s decision, “[a]lthough the detectives’ lies about 25 DNA may have influenced defendant to admit licking Cassandra’s underwear and to admit that 26 his penis was ‘leaking,’” the detectives “repeatedly tried to get defendant to confess to 27 penetrating Cassandra’s vagina with his penis or his finger” to no avail. If the detectives’ 28 tactics were as coercive as petitioner claims, however, they “would have prompted defendant to 1 confess to penetration, regardless of whether or not he penetrated Kassandra.” The record 2 therefore demonstrates that petitioner’s “resistance, far from reflecting a will overborne by 3 official coercion, suggests instead a still operative ability to calculate his self-interest in 4 choosing whether to disclose or withhold information.” And, in rejecting petitioner’s argument 5 that Detective LaTendresse’s tactic of describing Kassandra as “very attractive” and suggesting 6 that Kassandra “came on to” petitioner rendered his confession involuntary, the state appellate 7 court correctly concluded that the statements did not constitute a promise of leniency but rather 8 conveyed a possible excuse for petitioner’s conduct.

9 In addition, the court of appeal also correctly identified and weighed the following 10 factual circumstances: (1) the detectives did not make threats or promises during the 11 interrogation, (2) the interrogation was not unduly lengthy and the detectives gave petitioner 12 breaks from questioning, (3) the detectives made an effort to make petitioner comfortable, 13 offering him food and beverages throughout the interrogation, (4) at 51 years old, petitioner had 14 the maturity to freely decide whether to confess, and (5) petitioner was not uneasy during the 15 interrogation — he laughed during questioning, affirmed that the detectives treated him “okay,” 16 and stated that the detectives “did a great job” during the interrogation. These facts are all 17 consistent with the requirements of voluntariness outlined in Withrow, 507 U.S. at 693. The 18 state appellate court’s determination, based on the totality of the circumstances, that petitioner’s 19 will was not overborne by police coercion is not contrary to, or an unreasonable application of, 20 Supreme Court precedent nor an “unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the 21 evidence presented in the State court proceeding.” 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(2). Federal habeas 22 relief is therefore not warranted on this claim.

23 Petitioner’s remaining arguments regarding this claim are unavailing. First, he argues 24 that a de novo review is required because the state court of appeal did not mention that, for 25 purposes of federal law, the government must prove the voluntariness of a confession by a 26 preponderance of the evidence. Even if petitioner is correct that do novo review is required, this 27 order would nevertheless conclude, for the reasons set forth above, that petitioner’s statements 28 were not coerced. Second, petitioner argues that the state appellate court failed to weigh that he

1 “was not an educated man,” that English was not his “main language,” and that he “had no way 2 of knowing that police officers routinely lie in these interviews.” Importantly, however, where 3 a petitioner has not established that a confession was the product of coercion, the petitioner’s 4 alleged lack of intelligence and education will not render the confession involuntary.
5 Amaya-Ruiz v. Stewart, 121 F.3d 486, 495 (9th Cir. 1997), overruled on other grounds United 6 States v. Preston, 751 F.3d 1008 (9th Cir. 2014). In any event, here, the state court’s failure to 7 expressly weigh these factors does not render its conclusion — that, under the “totality of the 8 circumstances,” including petitioner’s maturity and education, his statements were voluntary — 9 unreasonable.<sup>1</sup>

10 Petitioner’s claim that trial counsel’s failure to move to exclude the confession from 11 evidence denied him effective assistance of counsel also fails. A petitioner claiming ineffective 12 assistance of counsel must demonstrate that: (1) counsel’s actions were outside the wide range 13 of professionally competent assistance, and (2) that the petitioner was prejudiced by reason of 14 counsel’s actions. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 686–90 (1984). “[I]n order to show 15 prejudice when a suppression issue provides the basis for an ineffectiveness claim, the 16 petitioner must show that he would have prevailed on the suppression motion.” Bailey v.
17 Newland, 263 F.3d 1022, 1029 (9th Cir. 2001) (citation omitted). As explained above, both the 18 state court of appeal and the undersigned judge have determined that petitioner’s statements to 19 police were voluntary. Trial counsel’s failure to make a meritless motion cannot be considered 20 deficient performance under Strickland. See Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 375
21 (1986). Federal habeas relief on petitioner’s second claim is therefore unwarranted.<sup>2</sup>

23 <sup>1</sup> For this reason, petitioner’s “conditional motion” for an evidentiary hearing, in which he argues that 24 “it is assumed that petitioner was a mature individual, understood the English language, was of average 25 intelligence,” is DENIED. Even if this were not a case where federal review under Section 2254 “is limited to the record that was before the state court that adjudicated the claim on the merits,” Cullen v. Pinholster, 563 U.S. 170, 181–82 (2011), no further factual development of petitioner’s claim is necessary.

26 <sup>2</sup> Although petitioner raised his ineffective assistance of counsel argument in state court, the court of 27 appeal did not address the issue because it concluded that the confession was not involuntary. Aguirre, 2016 28 WL 3679901, at *1 n.1. In his petition for review filed in the California Supreme Court, petitioner claimed that his statement to police should have been suppressed as involuntary under the Fourteenth Amendment, but did not claim that he was denied effective assistance of counsel due to his attorney’s failure to move to suppress his statement. Accordingly, respondent argues, his ineffective assistance of counsel is unexhausted. Because this

Finally, a certificate of appealability will not be issued on either of petitioner’s claims. For the reasons set out above, jurists of reason would not find the denial of petitioner’s claims debatable or wrong. See Slack v. McDaniel, 529 U.S. 473, 484 (2000). Petitioner may not appeal the denial of a certificate of appealability in this Court but may seek a certificate from our court of appeals under Rule 22 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, all claims in petitioner’s Section 2254 petition are DENIED and a certificate of appealability will not issue. Judgment will be entered separately.
