Case 3:20-cv-05910-LB Document 45 Filed 09/18/20 Page 2 of 5

1 The government insists that no injunction is needed because the Secretary of Commerce 2 has issued his Identification of Prohibited Transactions (Identification), which specifies what will 3 be prohibited by Executive Order 13943 as of Sunday, September 20, 2020. See Dkt. 38; Declaration of Michael W. Bien in Support of Plaintiffs' Response to Defendants' September 18, 4 5 2020 Notice Regarding Implementation of Executive Order ("Bien Decl.") ¶ 2 & Ex. A (copy of Identification). The Secretary's promulgation proves exactly the opposite: The scope of the 6 7 prohibition remains unclear, lost in qualifying phrases and caveats, and thus users are 8 appropriately fearful that their conduct will be banned. And in prominent media pronouncements 9 this morning, the Secretary has stated that under this Identification the Executive Order will ban 10 all use of WeChat effective Sunday, thus causing the harms we outlined in our earlier papers. The media understands this to be a "ban" and is so reporting. Finally, the government's earlier 11 12 assurances to Plaintiffs and to this Court are not entirely consistent with the Commerce 13 Department's announced rules-further proof that the government's rushed actions warrant 14 careful judicial review before they are allowed to take effect. In short, the vagueness concerns that Plaintiffs have raised—and that this Court recognized during the preliminary injunction hearing— 15 have not been resolved. The Court should issue the preliminary injunction it outlined during 16 17 yesterday's hearing.

18 1. According to the Identification, the Secretary's prohibition "only apply to the 19 parties to business-to-business transactions" (id. at 6), so-the government stresses-individual 20users should not "fear criminal prosecution or civil enforcement for personal use of the WeChat 21 app to communicate with friends and family, read the news, engage in political debate, or 22 participate in religious activities." Dkt. 38 at 2-3. But it is in fact quite unclear from the terms of 23 the Identification whether any of these uses will still even be able to occur after Sunday: While the 24 prohibitions apparently apply only to business-to-business transactions, the prohibited b2b 25 transactions also seem to include all of the functions necessary to allow any use of the WeChat 26 app to occur in the United States: the Secretary has interpreted "transaction" to include the 27 provision to WeChat or Tencent of "internet hosting services" (id. at $5 \ (2)$, "content delivery" 28 services" (id. at 5 ¶ 3), and "internet transit or peering services" (id. at 6 ¶ 4) "enabling the functioning ... of the WeChat mobile application." Id.

3 This is by no means the only ambiguity in the Secretary's order. For example, the 4 Identification in one place says that the prohibition does not include "the exchange of ... business 5 information using the WeChat mobile application, to include the transferring and receiving of funds." Id. at 7. But elsewhere, the Secretary bans "[a]ny provision of services through the 6 7 WeChat mobile application for the purpose of transferring funds" (id. at $6 \P 5$); does the ban, 8 therefore, include all of the backend services necessary to allow that individual ("business") 9 transfer of funds? Users are left wondering including several of the plaintiffs who are or operate 10 businesses on WeChat.

Indeed, it is unclear if the government itself knows what the Secretary has banned. On the 11 12 one hand, there are news reports today quoting "a senior Commerce official" as saying that, 13 because of the Identification, "[w]hat immediately is going to happen is users are going to experience a lag or lack of functionality' 'It may still be usable but it is not going to be as 14 15 functional as it was.' There may be sporadic outages as well, the official said." Bien Decl. ¶ 7 & Ex. F (September 18, 2020 Reuters article). But Secretary Ross himself said earlier this morning 16 17 on the Fox Business Network that, "[f]or all practical purposes [WeChat] will be shut down in the 18 U.S. ... as of midnight Monday." Bien Decl. ¶ 4 & Ex. C. The government has carefully focused 19 its Notice to this Court on the likelihood of civil or criminal penalties for individual users. See 20Dkt. 38 at 2, 3. The government does not really address what the order will actually do, however, 21 let alone all the harms that flow from an absolute ban on WeChat. In addition, the ambiguity of 22 the Executive Order as to retroactive application is maintained in today's Statement, which states 23 that the Secretary may continue to change the definition of "transaction" in the future, which 24 Section 3 of the EO allows to become effective without notice. Bien Decl. ¶ 2 & Ex. A 25 (Identification at paragraph 7). 2. 26 It also remains similarly unclear what, if any, factual basis the Administration has 27 for its claims that ordinary uses of WeChat represent an urgent threat to national security. In a 28 televised interview on Friday morning, the Secretary of Commerce stated that it "is our fear" that

Case No. 3:20-cv-05910-LB

WeChat is "taking data from the American public and sending it to China." Bien Decl. ¶ 11. But 1 2 the Secretary provided no examples of "data" being "sen[t]... to China" or how the mere 3 transmission of "data" to China constitutes a national security threat. A separate statement from an anonymous "senior Commerce official" to a reporter for the technology publication CNET 4 5 appears to confirm that the Administration has no evidence whatsoever of private data being harvested by WeChat in the United States. "Whether we have any evidence, domestically, of 6 7 these particular apps taking data is missing the point, according to this official, because the 8 Administration "know[s] what the Chinese government's intent is here in the United States." Bien 9 Decl. ¶ 10 & Ex. I. Serious questions thus continue to exist whether the interests identified by the 10 government really exist, let alone preclude being so urgent as to need rushed enforcement without 11 giving the court and the parties time to address them.

12 3. In the government's Notice submitted to this Court on Wednesday, the government 13 stressed that "we can provide assurances that the Secretary does not intend to take actions that would target persons or groups whose only connection with WeChat is their use or downloading 14 15 of the app to convey personal or business information between users." Dkt. 31, at 2. Although it may well be true that the government will not "take action[]" against such uses, what the 16 17 government failed to say in that filing was that both use and downloading of the WeChat app would be prohibited effective Sunday.¹ Counsel may not have known the true scope of the ban 18 19 (and they did note that "the Department of Commerce continue[d] to review a range of 20transactions" then). And the government's "assurance" was, perhaps carefully, framed only in 21 terms of enforcement actions against users-not directly addressing what conduct would be banned. But this ambiguity, which certainly affected the presentation of plaintiffs' preliminary 22 23injunction motion before the Court yesterday, is yet more proof that the government's rushed 24 process itself causes plaintiffs and others harm.

27 ¹ While there may be some question about whether use of the app will continue to be allowed, there is no doubt that the Secretary has purported to preclude all downloading of 28 the app as of that day. See Identification at $5 \ 1$. [3617036.2]

1	4. Plaintiffs in this case have sought a preliminary injunction barring enforcement of
2	the Executive Order pending the outcome of this litigation or alternatively for 60 days afgter the
3	secretary defines the covered transactions. See Dkt. 17-13, at ¶¶ 11-13 (proposed relief). That
4	remains the appropriate relief given, so no new motion for a preliminary injunction is needed. To
5	be sure, the Secretary's Identification starts the 60-day clock contained in the proposed
6	preliminary injunction. But it is the Executive Order that harms plaintiffs, and the existing
7	preliminary injunction motion remains for the Court's decision.
8	* * * *
9	The Court should therefore preserve the status quo, as plaintiffs have argued, to allow the
10	parties an opportunity to address the important questions about, first , what the Secretary's
11	Identification actually means, and second , the legality of those prohibitions. Because the E.O. is
12	itself ultra vires and in violation of the First and Fifth Amendment, the Secretary's
13	pronouncements cannot "cure" those defects. Especially given the fact that the Identification
14	apparently will shut WeChat down entirely, thus plainly operating as a prior restraint to protected
15	speech, plaintiffs' preliminary injunction is clearly necessary.
