I have a rouge group in my area. The lady that has set it up has even had a group deleted in the last sweep of rouge groups by yahoo. She doesn't understand that these groups are copyrighted by the (TM) and even uses the (TM) in her group. She set this group up because I would not allow her to post 20 different needed desperately posts in the same day on my group. She still though thinks that anyone can use the (TM) as long as they mark the name.

I am needing a letter to put up stating that the groups are (TM) and she is violating that trademark by having the group up. Also, yes she has been reported to the GOA for being a rouge group too.

Thanks

I believe you mean rogue group. ;) As for handling it, let the GOA handle it officially. You've done your job by reporting it. They're quite experienced at handling rogues, and have the weight of Freecycle

Thanks for asking about this. It sounds like you did everything right! Reporting it to your GOA is exactly what I would have asked you to do. The GOA can then pass it on as a rogue and we will ask the owner to delete... if she doesn't, it gets reported to Yahoo. If this were someone with whom you had a friendly relationship, I might welcome you to send a happy little note just mentioning that what she's doing isn't OK, but given the circumstances, I really think it's best for you to stick to all the good you're doing moderating your local group and let us be the bad guys.

Thanks!

GOA are the only ones that should handle those rogue groups. I hope that is not you that is posting those messages on that groups site, very uncalled for and unneeded. Best left to those that know how to handle them. Posting messages like that is not the way to resolve matters, nor is emailing the owner of that site.

Best thing to do is let the GOA handle it and let it rest and let it be. Flaming another group is not the way to handle things at all.

Exactly how does Yahoo get rid of rogue groups?

If we see one, is there a certain email address that the GOA or us, that the information is sent too?

I thought customer service or help at Yahoo didn't exist LoL!
