**E-FILED - 8/17/10**

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

NICHOLAS HARRIS,

Petitioner,

v.

Respondent.

No. C 01-21193 RMW (PR)

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART PETITIONER'S WRIT FOR HABEAS CORPUS

On April 9, 1997, petitioner was convicted of two counts of grand theft, one count of attempting to dissuade a witness in furtherance of a conspiracy, one count of access card forgery, and one count of escape from a county jail. After unsuccessfully seeking relief in the California courts, he filed a petition for writ of habeas corpus under 28 U.S.C. § 2254 challenging all five convictions. This court found that the petition stated eleven cognizable claims under § 2254 and issued an order to show cause why this court should not grant the writ. Respondent filed an answer addressing the merits of the petition, and petitioner filed a traverse. Thereafter, on September 18, 2007, the court ordered respondent to file a supplemental answer showing cause why the petition should not be granted based upon an additional claim raised in petitioner's amended petition, which claim challenges petitioner's sentence. Respondent filed a supplemental answer, and petitioner filed a supplemental traverse.

1 After reviewing the papers and the record, the court finds that petitioner is entitled to 2 habeas corpus relief as to his conviction of one of the two counts of grand theft.
3 Accordingly, the court grants the petition to the extent it seeks relief from the state court 4 judgment on that count. The court finds, however, that petitioner is not entitled to habeas 5 corpus relief with respect to his conviction on the four remaining counts, and denies his 6 petition with respect to his conviction on such counts. Based upon the sentences he received 7 on the four remaining counts, upon which habeas relief is not granted, petitioner's continued 8 custody in is lawful.

9 BACKGROUND

10 On March 18, 1997, petitioner was brought to trial on five separate felony charges, 11 and allegations of four prior "strike" convictions. Four of the five charges against petitioner 12 stemmed from his and his girlfriend's (Gina Miller) relationships with a series of elderly 13 gentlemen, whom the couple was accused of defrauding. The prosecution formally charged 14 petitioner and Miller with grand theft by false pretenses from two such gentlemen, Nicholas 15 Brayevich and Wilbur Johnson, and additionally introduced evidence of three uncharged 16 similar incidents involving Ned Wyss, Robert Dodd, and Jack McCallister. In addition to the 17 theft charges, petitioner was charged with access card forgery with respect to Wilbur 18 Johnson, and both petitioner and Miller were charged with attempting to dissuade Nicholas 19 Brayevich from testifying. Petitioner was also charged with escaping from the Santa Clara 20 County jail while awaiting trial on the above charges.

21 Petitioner and Miller were tried together, and the evidence admitted against them was 22 voluminous. The California Court of Appeal summarized the evidence presented to the jury 23 in a "much abridged" format as follows:

24 Nicholas Brayevich, Counts 1-4

25 In September 1994, 84-year-old bachelor Nicholas Brayevich shared a 26 house with his sister Stella in the Willow Glen area of San Jose. The day after 27 Stella was moved into a convalescent hospital and Brayevich was left alone in 28 their house, defendant Miller, a total stranger, approached him as he was gardening, identified herself as Selena Bay, and asked to use his bathroom.
Brayevich allowed her to do so, and after she came out the two stood in the kitchen and talked.

1 Miller repeated the visit a few days later, and continued to visit 2 Brayevich, uninvited, on a regular basis. She arrived and left by taxi and did 3 not explain the reason for her visits. From questioning Brayevich, she found 4 out that one of his sisters was dead and the other was in a convalescent 5 hospital. She asked whether he was lonely. She told him that she was from 6 Greece and was alone in this country. She said she had no family and she was 7 single, a virgin, and that she also lived alone.

8 The second time Miller came to Brayevich's house, he saw her "opening 9 drawers and shuffling through clothing and this and that, looking in the 10 closets." Brayevich "should have objected", but he thought she was "young" 11 and "innocently curious". Nevertheless, he also thought she was "quite 12 audacious," rummaging through drawers where he kept his business records.

13 Once, he was surprised to see Miller at the convalescent hospital 14 standing at the door of Stella's room looking in at her. Miller had not 15 accompanied Brayevich to the hospital nor had she told him she was planning 16 to go there.

17 About the sixth or seventh time Miller visited Brayevich, she brought 18 along [petitioner] Harris, whom she introduced as "Sam," an "old" and she 19 implied, undesirable friend from Los Angeles. She never admitted Harris was 20 her boyfriend and "scoffed at the idea" when Brayevich asked if she were 21 married to him.

22 In reality, she was living with defendant Harris "as husband and wife" 23 along with her two children, three-year-old Moses and four- or five-year-old 24 Eric. Harris had been her boyfriend for four or five years and they had lived 25 together in Los Angeles, San Carlos, and several addresses each in Sunnyvale, 26 San Jose, and Campbell.

27 Brayevich regularly received money from his investments and had 28 accounts at Bank of the West, American Savings, and Smith Barney, among 29 other financial institutions. He lived frugally, paying cash or "do[ing] 30 without." He did not shop at expensive stores like Nordstrom's, Macy's, or the 31 Emporium. Miller convinced him to apply for credit cards, and to take her 32 shopping at various department stores. She "knew the best places" to shop.
33 "Generally I followed her like a faithful puppy and she would go ahead of me 34 and do the shopping."

35 Miller asked for and received cash (she had a "liking for hundred dollar 36 bills"), which Brayevich took from bank accounts, his Smith Barney account, 37 and as cash advances on his recently-acquired American Express and Union 76 38 credit cards. The cash amounts ranged from $500 to $25,000.

39 Miller also asked for and received a cashier's check for $51,815 for a 40 down payment on a house, a $45,000 Chevy Suburban (to which Brayevich 41 retained title in his name), almost $8,000 for a 1977 Mercedes convertible and 42 a new top, a television set and stereo equipment costing $5,651.95, and a 43 $21,249.90 diamond "engagement" ring. Miller told Brayevich the ring would 44 make their relationship more "bonding" or "binding".

45 Brayevich never intended to marry Miller even though she talked about 46 doing so. Brayevich admitted to a "sexual" relationship with Miller, but it 47 consisted of hugging, kissing, and back rubbing. Miller always wore 48 underwear, at least, and there was no sexual intercourse. Brayevich spent 49 money on Miller because he wanted to "put a hold on her" and keep her 50 affection.

51 In addition, Brayevich gave Harris cash because he thought Miller 52 wanted him to and paid credit card bills for vehicle rentals, airplane tickets, 53 jewelry, clothing, and other articles run up by Miller and Harris without 54 permission.

1           Brayevich eventually realized defendants were engaged in a "skin 2 game" and they "were out to get as much money" as possible from him. He 3 would never have maintained the relationship and he would not have given 4 Miller and Harris money if he had known that Miller used different names, had 5 two children, and was living with Harris.

6           The "gig [was] up" as Brayevich put it when Brayevich's nephew and 7 next door neighbor, Ilko Vucia, called the San Jose police. On April 5, 1995, 8 Officer Gordon Bowen contacted Brayevich who introduced Miller, who was 9 visiting him, as Selena Bay. Bowen set up surveillance around Brayevich's 10 house and observed Miller leave the residence, walk around the corner and get 11 into a car which drove off. It appeared that she had prearranged for someone to 12 pick her up.

13           On August 16, 1995, Bowen and his partner contacted Brayevich and 14 Miller as she drove Brayevich's car into his driveway. Brayevich was upset 15 and walked to the side of the house. Miller identified herself to Bowen as 16 "Selena Brayevich" and said she had no driver's license. She became angry 17 and aggressive when Bowen said he knew her name was not Brayevich. She 18 eventually identified herself to officers as Gina Miller and was fingerprinted 19 and photographed.

20           On August 24, 1995, Bowen and Officer Peter Scanlan contacted 21 Brayevich and informed him of Miller's identity and the existence of her two 22 small children. Brayevich told Scanlan that Miller said she was a virgin. He 23 did not understand "how could a young lady be so deceitful." Scanlan said 24 Brayevich seemed both "sad" and "somewhat relieved" that he knew the truth 25 about Miller and Harris. Brayevich immediately stopped spending money on 26 them.

27           In September 1995, Brayevich received several telephone calls from 28 [petitioner and Miller]. Scanlan provided him with a tape recorder and he taped a number of the calls. Harris wanted to know if Brayevich was going to "press charges" and asked him to lie to the police because he had enough problems. Miller called Brayevich and asked him "to forget the whole thing."
She told him she loved him and cared for him, and that he "gotta stop those cops honey." Eventually, she wound up saying "if I go to jail, I'm gonna kill you! I swear! I don't want to go to jail honey. I don't want to."

Wilbur Johnson, Counts 5 and 6

          Eighty-two-year old Wilbur Johnson was a retired accountant who lived on a fixed income and who was very careful with his money. Two months before Wilbur died in November 1995, his son, Dave, who was accustomed to spending a lot of time with his father, moved in and lived with him until his death.

          Afterward, Dave found various charge receipts among Wilbur's papers for the purchase of items which Wilbur would not have used himself. These included the purchase of a cellular telephone, accessories, and service even though Dave had never seen Wilbur with a cellular telephone. There were charges from Bare Essentials amounting to $271.73, and charges of women's and children's clothing from Mervyn's ($483.77) and the Emporium.

          On July 15, 1995, a few months before his death, Wilbur used his Visa account to charge furniture costing $886.99 at the Bedroom Store. The sales receipt showed it was delivered to [petitioner and Millers'] Sunnyvale Avenue address and it was found in [petitioner's] house by the police when it was searched the following August. Receipts for items purchased on Wilbur's charge accounts were also found in defendants' residence. Cellular telephone charges on Wilbur's credit card accounts corresponded to numbers used by 1 [petitioner and Miller] and not Wilbur. Wilbur never mentioned [petitioner and 2 Miller] to Dave.

3 On an earlier occasion, on June 12, 1995, Wilbur, accompanied by 4 [petitioner] who was using the name, "Michael Marcos," came into the Circuit 5 City store on Stevens Creek and bought the cellular telephone. Wilbur signed 6 the credit card charge slip for the $221.53 initial purchase and identified 7 himself with a social security card and a driver's license. On June 28, 1995, 8 Michael Marcos traded in the analog telephone for a store credit and bought a 9 digital telephone which cost an additional $113. A second trade-in for a more 10 expensive model costing an additional $89 took place on August 16, 1995.
11 Michael Marcos also added a performance guarantee and a cigarette lighter 12 adapter. The clerk allowed Michael Marcos to obtain a store credit for the 13 initial purchase because Marcos was with Wilbur Johnson when the initial 14 transaction occurred. The subsequent purchase was made partially with funds 15 charged to Wilbur's account.

16 Evidence of Common Scheme or Plan

17 1. Jack McCallister

18 Around October 1995, 78-year old Jack McCallister was walking in a 19 Safeway store parking lot in Campbell when two young women came up 20 behind him and started a conversation. One called him "Fred" and told him she 21 thought he was someone she knew. She introduced the other woman and then 22 asked McCallister for his telephone number or address so she could take him 23 out to dinner. He made an appointment with her.

24 However, he told his daughter, Jill Genestra, about the incident. She 25 was out of sight in the kitchen when the two women showed up at 26 McCallister's home. After asking if he was alone, both women appeared 27 surprised and tense when he said his daughter was there and she walked into 28 the room. The women refused to give their names and show identification.
After more questioning by Genestra, McCallister's two sons-in-law arrived and Genestra asked the women to leave. They drove away in an older model white Cadillac. Several months later, Genestra saw a newspaper article with a photograph of a woman resembling one of the two persons who invited her father to dinner. McCallister recognized the photograph in the newspaper as resembling the woman who approached him in the parking lot but neither he nor Genestra could identify Miller in court.

29 2. Robert Dodd

30 In the summer of 1995, 79-year-old Robert Dodd met a woman who 31 identified herself as "Savanna" as he was dining alone in a Lyon's restaurant in 32 Sunnyvale. She convinced him she was alone and without money or any place 33 to stay with her two children, Eric and Moses.

34 Dodd allowed her to spend a night or two at his house (they slept in the 35 same bed but there was no sex) and then booked them into a motel. Dodd paid 36 for Eric and Moses to visit the dentist and took Savanna shopping to purchase 37 clothing for them. He paid for the motel bills, telephone calls, nanny services, 38 and some jewelry, but only "nickel or dime stuff." In the four to six months he 39 knew Savanna he spent about $5,000 on her. He had to mortgage one of his 40 homes to pay the expenses he incurred on her behalf. He had intended to sell 41 that house in any event. He last saw her in the beginning of October 1995, two 42 weeks before he was interviewed by Officer Scanlan. He never saw her again.
43 He could not identify Miller in court.

1                   3.     Ned Wyss

2                   In January 1994, Miller approached 89-year-old retired widower Ned 3                   Wyss in a Lucky grocery store in Cathedral City near Palm Springs. She 4                   identified herself as "Selena" and said she wanted to get to know him. She had 5                   a young child named "Moses" with her. Wyss ignored her. As he walked 6                   away, she said, "come on, be nice. Can you give me your name and phone 7                   number . . ."

8                   Wyss obliged. He talked to her for about 15 minutes and gave her his 9                   phone number. She called him the next day and asked him to buy food for her 10                  children. She met him at the Lucky store where he purchased groceries for her.
11                  She then told him she lived with an uncle who wanted her to move out. Wyss 12                  verified this by telephoning the uncle at a number Miller gave him, then they 13                  drove to an apartment complex where they met [petitioner] whom Miller 14                  introduced as the apartment manager and her friend.

15                  Harris told Wyss it would cost $900 for Miller to rent an apartment.
16                  Wyss produced the money the next day.

17                  Miller invited Wyss to dinner at [petitioner's] apartment in the same 18                  complex as the apartment she leased and introduced him to a woman who was 19                  supposed to be [petitioner's] wife. [Petitioner] and Miller "had the run of 20                  [Wyss's] house," and they became "pretty good friends" with him. Miller and 21                  [petitioner] often spoke to each other in a foreign language and Miller told 22                  Wyss she spoke Russian. Miller eventually identified herself as "Selena 23                  McGill." "McGill" was the surname of [petitioner's] father which [petitioner] 24                  occasionally used.

25                  Miller "was always trying to be amorous" with Wyss, including trying to 26                  kiss him. However, he rebuffed her. On one occasion after taking a shower, 27                  she emerged from his bathroom wrapped in a towel. She stood in front of him 28                  and dropped it. He told her to "get going." Miller said she wanted to marry 29                  him and asked him to buy her an engagement ring. Wyss laughed and 30                  absolutely refused, but, nevertheless, Miller introduced him as her fiancé.

31                  [Petitioner] asked to borrow a credit card for gasoline and then 32                  "disappears" for two or three weeks while he ran up a "tremendous" amount of 33                  charges. [Petitioner] asked Wyss to cosign a credit card application so 34                  [petitioner] could establish his own credit history. Wyss did so and Harris 35                  charged between $20,000 and $30,000 on the account. [Petitioner] also 36                  charged a $14,000 Rolex watch to Wyss's account without authorization.

37                  Before Wyss met [petitioner and Miller] he never kept a credit card 38                  balance and he had no outstanding debts. He owned a trailer home in 39                  Cathedral City and a condominium in Los Angeles which he purchased with 40                  cash. When Wyss received the bills for purchases signed by [petitioner] and 41                  confronted him about the charges, [petitioner] suggested Wyss get a loan on his 42                  condominium to pay the charges. [Petitioner and Miller] also promised to pay 43                  the charges but never did so. When Wyss said he was going to call the police, 44                  Miller told him he should not do so. After that, they disappeared. Wyss 45                  eventually mortgaged his condominium to pay the bills. However, as the 46                  charges mounted, he was forced to file for bankruptcy and lost his 47                  condominium.

48                  Harris's Escape

49                  On February 16, 1996, [petitioner] was an inmate in a Santa Clara 50                  County jail dormitory with Jamie Owen, who was due to be released that 51                  evening, and Dana Mulvani. Mulvani pointed out that Owen and [petitioner] 52                  bore a strong resemblance to each other.

1 [Petitioner] offered Owen $5,000 to switch identities with him so that 2 [petitioner] would be released instead of Owen. Owen expressed reservations 3 about the idea, but [petitioner] both cajoled and threatened him, saying that he 4 knew where Owen's family lived.

5 The two men exchanged wrist bands, and Owen provided [petitioner]
6 with the personal information he would need to pass through the jail release 7 procedure. [Petitioner] was fingerprinted and then released around 12:40 a.m.
8 Three or four hours later, Owen contacted jail guards saying he had slept 9 through his release call. [Petitioner] was rearrested around June 6, 1996, in the 10 Beverly Hills area.

11 People v. Miller, No. H017020, Slip Op. at 2-9 (Cal.Ct.App. June 7, 2000) (hereinafter "Slip 12 Op.")..<sup>1</sup>

13 On April 9, 1997, the jury found petitioner guilty of grand theft as to Brayevich (Cal.
14 Pen. Code § 487) with an enhancement for taking property valued at more than $150,000 15 (Cal. Pen. Code § 12022.6(b)), attempting to dissuade a witness (Brayevich) in furtherance of 16 a conspiracy, (Cal. Pen. Code § 136.1(c)(2)), access card forgery relating to Wilbur Johnson 17 (Cal. Pen. Code § 484f(b)), grand theft from Johnson (Cal. Pen. Code § 487), and escape 18 from a county jail (Cal. Pen. Code § 4532(b)(1)). A bench trial then commenced on 19 petitioner's four prior "strike convictions (Cal. Pen. Code §§ 667(a), 1170.12(b)(c)). On 20 April 10, 1997, the trial court found these allegations true.

21 The trial judge sentenced petitioner to three consecutive prison terms of 25 years to 22 life Count One (grand theft from Brayevich), Count Five (grand theft from Johnson), and 23 Count Seven (escape from county jail). The judge also sentenced petitioner to a sentence of 24 25 years to life on Count 2 (attempting to dissuade a witness), to run concurrently with the 25 sentence on Count One, and to a sentence of 25 years to life on Count Six (access card 26 forgery), stayed pursuant to Penal Code section 654 (which prohibits multiple punishment for 27 the same conduct). Additionally, the trial court sentenced petitioner to a consecutive two-28 year term for the excessive taking enhancement

<sup>1</sup>The state appellate court opinion was certified for partial publication pursuant to California Rule of Court 976(b). See People v. Miller, 81 Cal.App.4th 1427 (2000). The opinion is certified for publication "with the exception of 5 and 6 of the part entitled Sufficiency of the Evidence of False Pretense; and the following parts entitled Access Card Forgery, Dissuading of a Witness or Victim, Escape, Owen's Statements, Accomplice Testimony Instructions, and Motion Claiming Individous Prosecution." Id.

1 Petitioner appealed to the California Court of Appeal, Sixth Appellate District. The 2 appellate court affirmed his conviction and sentence in a partially published opinion on June 3 7, 2000.<sup>2</sup> Petitioner sought review from the Supreme Court of California. The Court denied 4 review on September 20, 2000. Petitioner filed this writ seeking habeas relief on December 5 18, 2001. On July 28, 2003, respondent filed an answer addressing the merits of the petition, 6 and on August 27, 2003, petitioner filed a traverse.<sup>3</sup> Thereafter, petitioner exhausted an 7 additional claim challenging the use of his prior convictions as “strikes” by raising such 8 claim in an unsuccessful a habeas petition filed in the California Supreme Court. Petitioner 9 then raised this in an amended petition filed in this court on June 12, 2007. Respondent filed 10 a supplemental answer on October 23, 2007 addressing the additional claim , and petitioner 11 filed a supplemental traverse January 10, 2008.

12 DISCUSSION

13 A. Standard of Review

14 This court will entertain a petition for writ of habeas corpus, "in behalf of a person in 15 custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court only on the ground that he is in custody in 16 violation of the Constitution or laws or treaties of the United States." 28 U.S.C. § 2254(a).
17 The court may not grant a petition with respect to any claim that was adjudicated on the 18 merits in state court unless the state court's adjudication of the claim: "(1) resulted in a 19 decision that was contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established 20 Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States; or (2) resulted in a 21 decision that was based on an unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence 22 presented in the State court proceeding." 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d).

24 <sup>2</sup>On July 6, 2000, the court of appeal issued an order modifying its June 7, 2000 25 opinion. The July 6, 2000, order did not alter the judgment.

26 <sup>3</sup>On March 15, 2004, April 14, 2004, and May 10, 2004, this court issued orders 27 requiring respondent to lodge additional state court trial exhibits and pages that appeared to 28 be missing from the Clerk's Transcript lodged with this court. Respondent lodged copies of all of the requested documents.

1 "Under the 'contrary to' clause, a federal habeas court may grant the writ if the state 2 court arrives at a conclusion opposite to that reached by [the Supreme] Court on a question of 3 law or if the state court decides a case differently than [the] Court has on a set of materially 4 indistinguishable facts." Williams (Terry) v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 412-13 (2000). "Under 5 the 'unreasonable application clause,' a federal habeas court may grant the writ if the state 6 court identifies the correct governing legal principle from [the] Court's decisions but 7 unreasonably applies that principle to the facts of the prisoner's case." Id. "[A] federal 8 habeas court may not issue the writ simply because the court concludes in its independent 9 judgment that the relevant state-court decision applied clearly established federal law 10 erroneously or incorrectly. Rather, that application must also be unreasonable." Id. at 411.

11 A federal habeas court making the "unreasonable application" inquiry should ask 12 whether the state court's application of clearly established federal law was "objectively 13 unreasonable." Id. at 409. The "objectively unreasonable" standard does not equate to 14 "clear error" because "[t]hese two standards . . . are not the same. The gloss of clear error 15 fails to give proper deference to state courts by conflating error (even clear error) with 16 unreasonableness." Lockyer v. Andrade, 538 U.S. 63, 75 (2003).

17 While a state court decision may no longer be overturned on habeas review simply 18 because of a conflict with circuit-based law, circuit decisions may still be relevant as 19 persuasive authority to determine whether a particular state court holding is an "unreasonable 20 application" of Supreme Court precedent or to assess what law is "clearly established." Clark 21 v. Murphy, 331 F.3d 1062, 1070-71 (9th Cir. 2003).

22 B. Analysis of Legal Claims

23 As grounds for federal habeas relief petitioner asserts that: (1) there was insufficient 24 evidence to convict him of theft by false pretenses as to Nicholas Brayevich; (2) the trial 25 court failed to instruct the jury of the need for corroborating evidence as to the grand theft 26 count; (3) there was insufficient evidence to convict him of access card forgery; (4) there was 27 insufficient evidence to convict him of theft as to Wilbur Johnson; (5) the trial court 28 erroneously admitted evidence of uncharged acts of misconduct; (6) there was insufficient

1 evidence to convict him of attempting to dissuade a witness or victim; (7) the trial court 2 failed to instruct the jury on the lesser included offense of misdemeanor attempting to 3 dissuade a witness or victim; (8) the trial court gave confusing and conflicting instructions on 4 the offense of attempting to dissuade a witness or victim; (9) the trial court failed to instruct 5 on the necessary element of attempt on the attempting to dissuade a witness charge; (10) 6 there was insufficient evidence to convict him of escape; (11) the admission of hearsay 7 testimony regarding his escape offense violated his right to confront and cross-examine his 8 accusers and his right to due process; and (12) his sentence violates his right to due process 9 because the trial court did not prove beyond a reasonable doubt that his prior convictions 10 qualified as “strikes” under California’s “three strikes” law.

11 1. Sufficiency of Evidence Supporting Theft By False Pretenses Conviction 12 (Nicholas Brayevich)

13 Petitioner asserts that the evidence adduced at trial was insufficient to support any of 14 his five convictions. He first claims that the evidence introduced at trial was insufficient to 15 support his conviction of theft by false pretenses as to Nicholas Brayevich. In particular, he 16 contends that there was insufficient evidence to support this conviction because there was no 17 competent evidence corroborating Brayevich's testimony regarding co-defendant Miller's oral 18 false pretenses.

19 The Due Process Clause "protects the accused against conviction except upon proof 20 beyond a reasonable doubt of every fact necessary to constitute the crime with which he is 21 charged." In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 364 (1970). A state prisoner who alleges that the 22 evidence in support of his state conviction cannot be fairly characterized as sufficient to have 23 led a rational trier of fact to find guilt beyond a reasonable doubt e states a constitutional 24 claim, which, if proven, entitles him to federal habeas relief. see Jackson v. Virginia, 443 25 U.S. 307, 321, 324 (1979). A federal court reviewing collaterally a state court conviction 26 does not determine whether it is satisfied that the evidence established guilt beyond a 27 reasonable doubt. Payne v. Borg, 982 F.2d 335, 338 (9th Cir. 1992). The federal court 28 "determines only whether, 'after viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the

1 prosecution, any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime
2 beyond a reasonable doubt." See id. (quoting Jackson, 443 U.S. at 319). Only if no rational 3 trier of fact could have found proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, may the writ be 4 granted. See Jackson, 443 U.S. at 324.

5 Sufficiency claims are judged by looking at the elements of the crime under state law.
6 Jackson, 443 U.S. at 324, n.16. Under California law, a theft conviction on the theory of 7 false pretenses requires proof that:

8 (1) the defendant made a false pretense or representation to the owner of 9 property; (2) with the intent to defraud the owner of that property; and (3) the 10 owner transferred the property to the defendant in reliance on the 11 representation. In this context, reliance means that the false representation 12 'materially influenced' the owner's decision to part with his property; it need not 13 be the sole factor motivating the transfer. A victim does not rely on a false 14 representation if 'there is no causal connection shown between the 15 [representations] alleged to be false' and the transfer of property. Thus, if the 16 defendant makes both true and false statements to the owner, but the false 17 statements are irrelevant to the owner's decision to transfer the property, theft 18 on the theory of false pretense has not been committed. Reliance may be 19 inferred from all the circumstances.

20 People v. Wooten, 44 Cal. App. 4th 1834, 1842-43 (1996) (citations omitted).

21 Moreover, if the conviction rests primarily on the testimony of a single witness that 22 the false pretense was made, the making of the pretense must be corroborated. Cal. Penal 23 Code § 1110. The corroboration required by Penal Code section 1110 is of the making of the 24 pretense. Id. The circumstances connected with the transaction, the entire conduct of the 25 defendant, and his declarations to other persons may be looked to for the corroborative 26 evidence contemplated by the law. People v. Rondono, 32 Cal. App. 3d 164, 173 (1973).
27 The defendant cannot be convicted "unless the pretense is proven by the testimony of two 28 witnesses, or that of one witness and corroborating circumstances." Cal. Penal Code § 532(b). Corroborating evidence is sufficient if it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of a crime in such a way so as to reasonably satisfy the jury that the complaining witness is telling the truth; the corroboration is inadequate if it requires aid from the testimony of the witnesses to be corroborated to connect the defendant with the alleged offense. People v. Fujita, 43 Cal. App. 3d 454, 470 (1974); People v. MacEwing, 45 Cal. 2d

1 218, 225 (1955). Corroborative evidence may be found in the circumstances connected with 2 the transaction, the conduct of the defendant, and his declarations to other persons. Fujita, 43 3 Cal. App. 3d at 470; Randon, 32 Cal. App. 3d at 173. Because the corroborative evidence 4 need only tend to implicate the defendant in the alleged illegal activity, it may be slight and 5 entitled to little weight standing alone. Fujita, 43 Cal. App. 3d at 470.

6 At trial, Nicholas Brayevich testified at length regarding his relationships with co-7 defendant Gina Miller and with petitioner. Brayevich stated that his decision to part with 8 over $150,000 was based largely on Miller's representations that she was single, living alone, 9 had no children, and did not have a romantic relationship with petitioner. Nevertheless, 10 petitioner argues, there was no competent evidence admissible against him corroborating 11 Brayevich's testimony regarding Miller's oral misrepresentations.<sup>4</sup> The California appellate 12 court rejected this contention, finding that evidence regarding the Wyss, Dodd, and 13 McAllister incidents was sufficient to provide the corroboration required by Penal Code 14 section 532(b).

15 As summarized above, eighty-two-year old Ned Wyss testified that Miller approached 16 him while shopping alone at a Lucky grocery store near Palm Springs, and the two thereafter 17

18 <sup>4</sup>In his traverse, petitioner contends for the first time that he did not direct, and 19 therefore was not responsible for, co-defendant Miller's false representations about herself to 20 Nicholas Brayevich. The jury, however, did not need to reach the conclusion that petitioner 21 directed Miller to make the false representations. This is because the prosecution of 22 petitioner as to Nicholas Brayevich proceeded under California's "uncharged conspiracy" 23 doctrine. This doctrine allows evidence of a conspiracy to establish criminal liability for 24 acts of a co-conspirator -- in this case, permitting the jury to find that petitioner was 25 criminally responsible for co-defendant Miller's false representations to Brayevich if it found 26 that a conspiracy existed between petitioner and Miller to commit theft by false pretenses.

27 An extremely liberal construction of the traverse might lead one to conclude that 28 petitioner also contends that the trial court's instruction on, and the jury's probable application of, California's uncharged conspiracy doctrine violated his right to be proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of the false representation element of Penal Code section 484. An issue, however, cannot be raised for the first time in a traverse. Cacoperdo v.
Demosthenes, 37 F.3d 504, 507 (9th Cir. 1994); Sims v. Larson, 2002 WL 1497922,*2, n.4 (N.D. Cal. 2002). We also note that, given the complete absence of this issue from the state appellate court opinion, Harris' petition for habeas corpus, and respondent's answer, the issue is almost certainly unexhausted.

1 developed a relationship. During the course of this relationship, Miller misrepresented both 2 her name (she identified herself as 'Selena McGill'), and her connection with petitioner 3 (whom she introduced as her apartment manager and friend). After borrowing Wyss's credit 4 card, petitioner disappeared for two to three weeks and ran up a "tremendous" amount of 5 charges. Wyss also testified that petitioner asked him to co-sign a credit card application, 6 then charged $20,000 to $30,000 on the account. Petitioner also charged a $14,000 Rolex 7 watch to Wyss's account without authorization.

8         Seventy-nine-year old Robert Dodd testified that he was approached by a woman who 9 identified herself as 'Savanna' when dining alone at a Lyon's restaurant in Sunnyvale.
10 'Savanna' represented that she was alone and without any money or place to stay with her two 11 children, Eric and Moses. During a relationship that lasted approximately four to six months, 12 Dodd spent about $5,000 on 'Savanna.'

13         Seventy-eight-year old Jack McAllister testified that two women approached him in a 14 Safeway parking lot in Campbell and engaged him in conversation. One of the two women 15 asked to take him out to dinner. The dinner engagement was later broken by McAllister's 16 daughter, Jill Genestra, when the women arrived at McAllister's home and refused to give 17 their names. Genestra later saw Miller's photograph in the newspaper and thought the 18 woman in the photograph resembled one of the women who had approached her father.

19         The testimony of Messrs. Wyss, Dodd and McAllister tends to show that Miller had a 20 practice of approaching elderly men who appeared to be living on their own, giving them a 21 false name, and attempting to develop a relationship with them based on their sympathy, and, 22 in some cases, their sexual desires. Miller heightened these feelings by misrepresenting that 23 she was without both resources and romantic entanglements, including such an entanglement 24 with petitioner, whom she introduced to Brayevich as a friend and to Wyss as a friend and 25 apartment manager. The court finds this testimony sufficient to corroborate Brayevich's 26 allegations that Miller and petitioner misrepresented Miller's identity and personal 27 circumstances, including the nature of Miller's relationship with petitioner.

1           Apparently anticipating an argument by respondent to the contrary, Harris's petition 2 argues at length that Brayevich's testimony concerning co-defendant Miller's false 3 representations was not corroborated by a taped conversation that occurred between Miller 4 and Brayevich on September 22, 1995. The emphasis petitioner places on the admissibility 5 of this taped conversation appears misplaced for several reasons.

6           First, the appellate court did not rely on this conversation to reach its conclusion that 7 section 532(b)'s corroboration requirement had been met. Second, although the record is 8 somewhat ambiguous on this point, it appears that the jury could have interpreted certain of 9 the trial judge's admonishments and instructions as precluding its consideration of statements 10 made by co-defendant Miller subsequent to petitioner's arrest (including the September 22, 11 1995, conversation between Miller and Brayevich) against petitioner. If the jury thus 12 interpreted the admonishments and instructions, it, like the appellate court, did not rely on the 13 conversation to reach its conclusion that section 532(b)'s corroboration requirement was 14 satisfied. Finally, for the reasons discussed below, the taped conversation did corroborate 15 Miller's earlier alleged false representations, and it was admissible evidence that could be 16 used against petitioner.

17           The conversation contained the following exchanges between Brayevich and Miller:

18           Miller: I don't know what you want from me? I don't understand. Look, the 19           only thing I gave you was sex.

20           Brayevich: Sex? What kind of sex? What was all this bull about you being a 21           virgin and everything . . . and then . . . the truth comes out that you had two 22           kids.

23           Miller: Wait a second sweetheart, I didn't have no sex; I'm not even married. I 24           live on my own. Okay?

25           Brayevich: Then what's all this about you having two kids?

26           Miller: I don't have two kids. They're lying to you 27           . . .

28           Miller: Listen Nicky, wait a second, I don't want you to be thinking that I was 29           married, because I'm not. And I don't have children.

30           Brayevich: Oh? You don't have children?

31           Miller: No .

32           . . .

33           Miller: The reason I didn't tell you my real name is because I figured you 34           wouldn't go out with me . . .

1 (Answer to Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus ("Answer"), Exhibit E, lodged April 22, 2 2004.)

3 Petitioner's arguments to the contrary notwithstanding, a logical inference can be 4 made from Miller's statements during this recorded conversation that she had, in the past, 5 represented to Brayevich that she had no children, was a virgin, and lived alone. As such, 6 this conversation does corroborate Brayevich's testimony regarding Miller's false 7 representations.

8 Petitioner asserts that, even if co-defendant's statements during the September 22, 9 1995, conversation implicitly corroborate her alleged prior false representations, the taped 10 conversation was inadmissible for two reasons. First, petitioner argues that Miller's tape 11 recorded statements were out-of-court statements of an accomplice, which themselves must 12 be corroborated under the accomplice rule contained in California Penal Code § 1111 13 ("section 1111") before they can be used against him. He cites the case of People v. Belton, 14 23 Cal. 3d 516, 519-27 (1979), in which the California Supreme Court held that section 15 1111, which provides that a conviction cannot be based solely on uncorroborated accomplice 16 testimony, applies to uncorroborated out-of-court accomplice statements admitted under 17 California Evidence Code ("Evidence Code") section 1235 (which codifies the hearsay 18 exception for prior inconsistent statements), even though these statements are not within the 19 traditional definition of "testimony" in that they are not given under oath. Subsequent 20 California Supreme Court opinions have emphasized, however, that Belton did not hold that 21 all out-of-court statements should be interpreted as "testimony" necessitating the application 22 of section 1111's corroboration requirement, but rather that:

23 'testimony' within the meaning of section 1111 includes all oral statements 24 made by an accomplice or coconspirator under oath in a court proceeding and 25 all out-of-court statements of accomplices and co-conspirators used as 26 substantive evidence of guilt which are made under suspect circumstances. .
27 . . On the other hand, when the out-of-court statements are not given under 28 suspect circumstances, those statements do not qualify as 'testimony' and hence need not be corroborated under section 1111.

People v. Williams, 16 Cal. 4th 153, 245 (1997) (citations omitted) (emphasis added).

1 In the instant case, co-defendant Miller's statements were not made under suspect 2 circumstances. She was not being questioned by the police or by any other person arguably 3 connected with law enforcement who might have been able to secure more lenient treatment 4 for her. Moreover, the incentive for blame-shifting, at least in its traditional form, was 5 largely absent from this case -- because evidence establishing Miller's prior false 6 representations was detrimental to both Miller and petitioner's prospects at trial. Given these 7 circumstances, Miller's statements to Brayevich did not qualify as "testimony" under section 8 1111, and therefore did not need to be corroborated in order to be admissible.

9 Petitioner next argues that Miller's recorded statement was inadmissible because "co-10 defendant's statements were made by co-defendant only after petitioner already was in 11 custody, and thus they obviously were not part of any ongoing conspiracy so as to be 12 admissible against petitioner under the coconspiratory exception to the hearsay rule 13 contained in section 1220 of the California Evidence Code." (Petition, December 18, 2001, 14 ("Petition"), at 10-11, 11-16.) As respondent points out, however, Miller's statements were 15 not offered to show the truth of the matters asserted (i.e., that Miller was a virgin, had no 16 children, and lived alone). Rather, they were introduced to corroborate Brayevich's 17 testimony that Miller had made false representations to him regarding her personal 18 circumstances. As such, the statements did not constitute hearsay, and thus the applicability 19 of an exception to the hearsay rule is irrelevant.<sup>5</sup>

20 In sum, the statements made by co-defendant Miller to Brayevich during their 21 conversation of September 22, 1995, were admissible against petitioner to corroborate 22 Brayevich's testimony that co-defendant had earlier made false representations. Moreover, 23 the statements corroborated Brayevich's testimony regarding the earlier false representations 24 allegedly made to him by Miller. In any event, the state appellate court found that evidence

26 <sup>5</sup>Nor does the admission, on a corroboration theory, of co-defendant's statements 27 during the September 22, 1995, conversation against petitioner run afoul of the prohibition 28 against charging petitioner with acts taken by co-defendant Miller subsequent to petitioner's arrest. The statements were not admissible as acts of Miller chargeable to petitioner, rather they were admissible to show that earlier acts of Miller - properly chargeable to petitioner under the uncharged conspiracy doctrine - had taken place.

1 of the Wyss, Dodd, and McAllister incidents was sufficient to meet section 532(b)'s 2 corroboration requirement, and, as explained above, this court agrees.

3 In addition to examining petitioner's corroboration argument, the court has also 4 independently reviewed the voluminous record in this case to determine whether, "after 5 viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, any rational trier of fact 6 could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt." Jackson, 7 443 U.S. at 319. There was ample evidence from which a rational juror could have found the 8 elements of theft by false pretenses proven beyond a reasonable doubt.<sup>6</sup>

9 Therefore, petitioner has failed to demonstrate that the state appellate court's decision 10 was contrary to clearly established United States Supreme Court precedent, or involved an 11 unreasonable application of such precedent. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d). Accordingly, petitioner is 12 not entitled to habeas relief on this claim.

13 2. Instructions On Penal Code Section 532(b)'s Corroboration Requirement

14 Petitioner claims that the trial court's instructions failed to adequately inform the jury 15 of the nature and amount of evidence necessary to corroborate the existence of a false 16 pretense for a conviction of theft by false pretenses pursuant to California Penal Code § 17 532(b). Respondent contends that this claim is procedurally defaulted.

18 Federal habeas review of a claim is barred in all cases where a state prisoner has 19 defaulted his federal claim in state court due to an independent and adequate state procedural 20 rule. Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 750 (1991). To preclude federal review, a state 21 court must have relied on a procedural bar as the basis for its disposition of the case. Harris 22 v. Reed, 489 U.S. 255, 261-62 (1989).

23 To determine whether petitioner's claim was procedurally barred, we look to the last 24 reasoned state court opinion - in this case the opinion of the California state court of appeals.
25 See Ylst v. Nunnemaker, 501 U.S. 797, 803 (1991). Citing California's rule that a party may 26 not complain on appeal that an instruction correct in law and responsive to the evidence was

28 <sup>6</sup>Petitioner does not challenge the sufficiency of evidence supporting the great taking enhancement.

1 too general or incomplete unless the party has requested appropriate clarifying or amplifying 2 language, the court of appeal held that because the instruction was correct in law, and 3 because the defendant had not requested amplifying or clarifying language, petitioner had 4 waived this claim on appeal. Slip Op. at 15:3-7.

5 California's rule that a party's failure to request the amplification or clarification of a 6 jury instruction at trial waives the right to object to the adequacy of the instruction on appeal 7 is an "independent" state procedural rule in that it stems solely from California law. See, 8 e.g., People v. Guiun, 18 Cal. 4th 558, 570 (1998); People v. Byrnes, 30 Cal. 206, 208 9 (1866).<sup>7</sup> A burden-shifting analysis is applied to resolve the issue of adequacy: "Once the 10 state pleads the affirmative defense of an independent and adequate state procedural bar, the 11 burden to place that defense in issue shifts to the petitioner. This must be done, at a 12 minimum, by specific allegations by the petitioner as to the adequacy of the state procedure."
13 Bennett v. Mueller, 322 F.3d 573, 384 (9th Cir. 2003). In the instant case, as stated above, 14 respondent pled the affirmative defense of an independent and adequate state procedural bar, 15 shifting the burden to place that defense at issue to petitioner. Petitioner, however, has not 16 made any specific allegations as to the inadequacy of the state procedural rule. Therefore, he 17 has not placed the adequacy of the state's procedural bar at issue.

18 Because the procedural rule relied upon by the California appellate court is 19 "independent" for purposes of procedural default, and because petitioner has not placed the 20 rule's "adequacy" at issue, the court concludes that this claim is procedurally defaulted.
21 State court prisoners can under limited circumstances obtain federal habeas review of 22 procedurally defaulted claims by demonstrating cause for the default and actual prejudice as

24 <sup>7</sup>In his papers, respondent conflates the rule that a party's failure to request the 25 amplification or clarification of a jury instruction at trial waives the right to object to the 26 adequacy of the given instruction on appeal with California's often cited "contemporaneous 27 objection rule", set forth in California Evidence Code § 353. The plain language of section 28 353, however, refers only to objections to evidence, not to jury instructions. In light of the conclusion, below, the court need not resolve for purposes of this petition whether the two rules should in fact be considered the same for purposes of procedural default. Cf. Vansickel
v. White, 166 F.3d 953, 957-58 (9th Cir. 1999) (California's contemporaneous objection rule is independent and adequate for purposes of procedural default analysis).

1 a result of the alleged violation of federal law, or by showing that failure to consider the 2 claims will result in a fundamental miscarriage of justice. Coleman, 501 U.S. at 729-30. A 3 petitioner must establish factual innocence to show that a fundamental miscarriage of justice 4 would result from application of a procedural default. See Gandarela v. Johnson, 286 F.3d 5 1080, 1085 (2002).

6 In his traverse, petitioner concedes that he cannot meet the cause and prejudice 7 standard. Traverse at 10:14-21. He contends, however, that he meets the "fundamental 8 miscarriage of justice" test because the failure to instruct, "resulted in the conviction of one 9 who is actually innocent." Traverse at 10:21-26. Petitioner, however, submits no evidence, 10 and makes no argument supporting this position outside of the conclusory assertion that he is 11 actually innocent. For the reasons discussed above, that sufficient evidence existed in the 12 trial record to support petitioner's conviction of theft by false pretenses, and petitioner's 13 failure to offer any evidence contradicting the evidence admitted at trial, the court rejects his 14 conclusory assertion of actual innocence.

16 3. Sufficiency of Evidence Supporting Conviction For Credit Card Forgery

17 Petitioner next contends that the evidence adduced at trial was insufficient to support 18 his conviction of credit card forgery with respect to the victim, Wilbur Johnson. Liberally 19 construed, the petition advances four separate arguments supporting this insufficiency of 20 evidence claim. First, petitioner asserts that the offense of credit card forgery did not occur 21 because, "the only individual [who] signed a name in relation to any type of credit card 22 transaction was the elderly Wilbur Johnston himself."<sup>8</sup> Petition at.19:11-14. Second, 23 petitioner appears to suggest that no crime occurred in the absence of a net loss to victim 24 Johnson. Third, petitioner claims that there was insufficient evidence at trial to establish that 25 he was the person who used the fictitious name "Michael Marco." Finally, petitioner argues 26 that the prosecution failed to establish the "lack of authority" element of credit card forgery.

28 <sup>8</sup>Wilbur Johnson also went by the name "Wilbur Johnston." RT at 1158:7-9.

1 As explained above, a federal court reviewing collaterally a state court conviction
2 does not determine whether it is satisfied that the evidence established guilt beyond a 3 reasonable doubt. Payne, 982 F.2d at 338. The federal court "determines only whether, 'after 4 viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, any rational trier of fact 5 could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt.'" See id.
6 (quoting Jackson, 443 U.S. at 319). Only if no rational trier of fact could have found proof of 7 guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, may the writ be granted. See Jackson, 443 U.S. at 324.

8 Under California law, the elements of credit card forgery are: "(1) a person signed the 9 name of another or fictitious person to any [sales slip, sales draft, or instrument for the 10 payment of money which evidences an access card transaction]; (2) the person had no 11 authority to sign the name of the other person; (3) the person knew that he did not have the 12 authority to sign the other's name; and (4) the person signed the instrument with the specific 13 intent to defraud another person." Cal. Penal Code § 484f(b); CALJIC No. 15.00.

14 Petitioner first argues that the offense of credit card forgery did not occur because "the 15 only individual [who] signed a name in relation to any type of credit card transaction was the 16 elderly Wilbur Johnston himself." Petition at 19:11-14. Respondent disputes the contention 17 that Wilbur Johnson was the only person to sign a document that falls within the scope of 18 Penal Code § 484f(b). Answer at 20:7-13.

19 As summarized in the background section above, the evidence admitted at trial 20 showed that a man accompanied Johnson when Johnson bought a cellular telephone on June 21 12, 1995. RT at 1099-1123. The same man returned the phone for a store credit which he 22 applied to a more expensive digital cellular phone, signing the name "Michael Marco" to a 23 receipt to receive the store credit and to a second receipt verifying that the returned telephone 24 was the item originally purchased. RT at 1102-14. The man came back a third time to return 25 the items and purchase a yet more expensive cellular telephone and telephone accessories, 26 again signing the name Michael Marco and having the initial purchase credited to his new 27 purchase. RT at 1102-14; People's Trial Exhibit #38, lodged July 28, 2003.

1 The appellate court found that the store credit receipts signed by "Michael Marco"
2 allowing Johnson's initial purchase amount of $221.53 to be applied toward Marco's 3 subsequent purchases constituted, "instrument[s] for the payment of money which evidences 4 an access card transaction" for the purposes of California Penal Code § 484f(b). This 5 determination of state law is binding on this court. See Bradshaw v. Richey, 546 U.S. 74, 76 6 (2005) (state court's interpretation of state law, including one announced on direct appeal of 7 challenged conviction, binds a federal court sitting in habeas corpus). Petitioner has 8 presented no authority, nor are we aware of any, to contradict the appellate court's 9 construction of section 484f(b) to include these types of store credit receipts. Therefore, 10 petitioner is incorrect that there was no evidence that anyone other than Johnson signed a 11 credit card instrument within the meaning of California Penal Code § 484f(b).

12 Petitioner's second argument is that, when the name Michael Marco was signed, "it 13 only pertained to a transaction where there was a return of property from a prior occasion 14 with the acquisition of replacement items where the difference was paid for in cash."
15 Petition at 19:18-21. That there may have been no net loss to Johnson, inasmuch as the 16 person using the name Michael Marco paid in cash the difference between the first 17 apparently authorized cellular telephone purchase and the subsequent, more expensive 18 cellular telephones and accessories, does not mean no crime occurred. The salient element of 19 section 484f(b) is the signing of the name of another person or a fictitious person in 20 connection with a credit card transaction. 2 Witkin, Cal.Crim. Law 3d (2000) § 192 at 219.
21 "The existence of a specific intent to defraud is an essential element of the crime of forgery, 22 but it is not necessary to complete the crime that any person be actually defrauded or suffer 23 a loss by reason of the forgery."<sup>9</sup> CALJIC 15.03 (emphasis added). Accordingly, petitioner's 24 argument that he could not be convicted in the absence of a net loss to Johnson fails.

27 <sup>9</sup>The use note accompanying CALJIC 15.03, the standard jury instruction for 28 California's general forgery statute, Penal Code section 470, states that the instruction should be adapted and used for violations of Penal Code section 484f(b) (the credit card forgery statute).

1 Third, petitioner contends that there is insufficient evidence to support a finding that 2 he "in fact was the individual who used the name Michael Marco in connection with the cash 3 transactions that occurred on June 28, 1995, and August 16, 1995." Petition at 20:4-7. The 4 California appellate court rejected this contention as follows:

5 The following evidence established that Harris was Michael Marco: a receipt signed 6 by "Mr. Marco" was found in the kitchen cupboard of Harris's residence at 537 7 Sunnyvale Avenue. There were cellular telephone charges on Johnston's credit card 8 accounts which corresponded to telephone numbers frequently called by defendants 9 including Miller's parents and Brayevich. Furthermore Harris used the name Michael 10 Marco or Michael Marcos to rent the house on Sunnyvale Avenue and he introduced 11 Miller as Gina Marco, his wife. He signed the lease Michael Marco. He also 12 identified himself by that name when he purchased [a] 1977 Mercedes.

13 Slip Op. at 19-20. The above evidence described by the state appellate court constitutes 14 sufficient evidence from which a rational fact-finder could find beyond a reasonable doubt 15 that petitioner was the person who signed the fictitious name "Michael Marco" to the store 16 credit receipts.

17 Finally, petitioner argues that the prosecution failed to establish the "lack of authority" 18 element of credit card forgery because it did not prove that Johnson did not give "Michael 19 Marco" authority to sign store credit receipts allowing Johnson's initial purchase amount to 20 be applied towards Marco's subsequent purchase. The prosecution need not prove the lack of 21 authority to sign a fictitious name, however. As explained in California state court opinions 22 analyzing California's general forgery statute, Penal Code section 470<sup>10</sup>:

23 Such an argument is pure sophistry. The requirement that there be proof of 24 lack of authority applies where the name of an actual person is signed, not to 25 the situation where a fictitious name is signed. "The proof of lack of authority 26 to sign the name of an actual person is necessary to prove the falsity of the 27 instrument; if the person whose name is signed to the instrument is fictitious, 28 proof of this fact is likewise proof of the falsity of the instrument. Thus, 'while one may sign a fictitious name which he has adopted for innocent purposes without being guilty of forgery, . . . if . . . fraud is shown, the fact that the name had been previously assumed by the one signing it [for any purpose] . . . will not prevent the signature being a forgery . . . .

27 <sup>10</sup> As explained in note 14, above, the standard jury instruction for California's 28 general forgery statute (which includes the 'lack of authority' element) applies to section 484f(b) prosecutions.

1 Wutzke v. Bill Reid Painting Service, 151 Cal. App. 3d 36, 41 (1984) (emphasis in original) 2 (citations omitted); see also People v. Porter, 136 Cal. App. 2d 461, 467 (1955). In the 3 instant case, ample circumstantial evidence showed that "Michael Marco" was a fictitious 4 person created by petitioner for use as one of his aliases. Because "Michael Marco" was a 5 fictitious name, it was not incumbent upon the prosecution to prove his 'lack of authority' to 6 sign this name.

7 In addition to rejecting the four specific arguments advanced by petitioner in support 8 of his claim that insufficient evidence supported his conviction for credit card forgery, the 9 court has independently reviewed those portions of the record relating to this conviction.
10 Based on such review, the court finds that a rational trier of fact could have found proof of 11 guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Therefore, petitioner has failed to establish that the state 12 appellate court's decision was contrary to clearly established United States Supreme Court 13 precedent, or involved an unreasonable application of such precedent.

14 Petitioner is not entitled to habeas relief on this claim.

15 4. Sufficiency of Evidence Supporting Grand Theft Conviction (Wilbur Johnson)

16 Petitioner next claims that there was insufficient evidence to support his conviction 17 for grand theft from Wilbur Johnson. The state appellate court rejected this claim, finding 18 that sufficient circumstantial evidence existed to support this conviction.

20 does not determine whether it is satisfied that the evidence established guilt beyond a
22 viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, any rational trier of fact 23 could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt.'" See id.
24 (quoting Jackson, 443 U.S. at 319). Only if no rational trier of fact could have found proof of 25 guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, may the writ be granted. See Jackson, 443 U.S. at 324; 26 Payne, 982 F.2d at 338; Miller, 757 F.2d at 992-93; Bashor, 730 F.2d at 1239.

27 Circumstantial evidence and inferences drawn from that evidence may be sufficient to sustain 28

1 a conviction. Walters, 45 F.3d at 1358. Mere suspicion and speculation, however, cannot 2 support logical inferences. Id.

3 Under California law, the crime of grand theft can be prosecuted on multiple theories, 4 including larceny, embezzlement, larceny by trick or device, and theft by false pretenses.
5 CALJIC 14.00; Cal. Penal Code § 484. Petitioner contends that the jury was instructed only 6 on a theory of theft by larceny, and not on the theories of theft by trick or device or theft by 7 false pretenses. He apparently claims that, because the jury was not instructed on a theory of 8 theft by false pretenses, his conviction cannot be upheld on this theory. Petitioner also 9 argues that the record contains insufficient evidence to support his conviction under any of 10 the theories that fall within the scope of California's grand theft statute. The appellate court 11 rejected these arguments as follows:

12 In California, the ancient common law distinctions between the theories 13 of larceny by trick and theft by false pretenses no longer exist by statute; under 14 section 484, there is simply one consolidated crime of theft, which the jury may 15 find upon either theory, if there is an 'unlawful taking'. (§ 952). As stated by 16 our Supreme Court in People v. Ashley, (1954) 42 Cal.2d 246, 258, 'The 17 purpose of the consolidation was to remove the technicalities that existed in the 18 pleading and proof of these crimes at common law . . . Juries need no longer be 19 concerned with the technical differences between the several types of theft, and 20 can return a general verdict of guilty if they find that an 'unlawful taking' has 21 been proved. We note that another recent larceny case . . . supports our 22 analysis: 'In the instant action it was irrelevant whether defendant obtained the 23 dress by trick or intimidation of the store employees. The end result was that 24 he left the store with property he had not paid for.' People v. Counts, (1995) 25 31 Cal.App.4th 785, 793.

26 In our case there is substantial, albeit circumstantial, evidence to 27 establish [petitioner's] intent to commit theft from Johnston as established by 28 his involvement in the conspiracy with Gina Miller to defraud Brayevich and others. (Evid. Code § 1101, subd. (b).) "Both direct and circumstantial evidence are acceptable as means of proof. Neither is entitled to any greater weight than the other." (CALJIC No. 2.00). There is no reasonable explanation for how [petitioner] came to acquire thousands of dollars of property charged to Johnston's account, absent fraud. (Cf. People v. Silberman (1989) 212 Cal.App.3d 1099, 1116-1117.) Johnston was living in retirement on a fixed income and was necessarily frugal. There is no evidence that Johnston owed a debt to petitioner; petitioner was not a relative or known to be a friend (whether as "Marco," "Harris," or any other name) who would be the normal object of Johnston's bounty. The only reasonable explanation for Johnston's unusual expenditures was that he was another victim of Harris's and Miller's common scheme or plan to defraud vulnerable old men. Substantial evidence supports the conviction.

1 People v. Miller, No. H017020, Slip Op. (Cal.Ct.App. June 7, 2000), as modified by People
2 v. Miller, No. H017020, Slip Op. at 3-4 (Cal.Ct. App. July 6, 2000).

3 First, petitioner's argument that the jury was not instructed on a theory of theft by 4 false pretenses is contradicted by the record. Although the trial judge's oral instructions 5 regarding this count focused primarily on the theory of theft by larceny the trial judge's 6 instruction that, "[t]he crime of theft may consist of theft by larceny or theft by false 7 pretenses" permitted the jury to also consider the theory of theft by false pretenses. RT at 8 2550:22-23. Accordingly, petitioner's conviction for grand theft could have rested upon 9 theories of either larceny or false pretenses.

10 Juries need not specify the theory under which they return a conviction of grand 11 theft, but at least one such theory must be supported by the record:

12 When the formerly distinct offenses of larceny, embezzlement, and obtaining 13 property by false pretenses were consolidated in 1927 into the single crime of 14 'theft' defined by Penal Code section 484<sup>11</sup>, most of the procedural distinctions 15 between those offenses were abolished. But their substantive elements were 16 not: "The elements of the several types of theft included within section 484 17 have not been changed, however, and a judgment of conviction of theft, based 18 on a general verdict of guilty, can be sustained only if the evidence discloses 19 the elements of one of the consolidated offenses.'

20 People v. Davis, 19 Cal. 4th 301, 304-05 (1998) (citing People v. Ashley, 42 Cal. 2d 246, 21 258 (1954)) (footnote added). With respect to larceny, the elements "are well settled: the 22 offense is committed by every person who (1) takes possession (2) of personal property (3) 23 owned or possessed by another, (4) by means of trespass (5) with intent to steal the 24 property, and (6) carries the property away. The act of taking personal property from the 25 possession of another is always a trespass unless the owner consents to the taking freely and 26 unconditionally or the taker has a legal right to take the property." Id. at 305 (citations and 27 footnotes omitted).

28 As detailed in the background section, Johnson purchased women's beauty products from Bare Escentuals, women's and children's clothing from Mervyn's and The Emporium,

<sup>11</sup>California Penal Code § 484 defines theft; sections 485, 486, and 487 set forth the degrees of theft and define grand theft.

1 and furniture from the Bedroom Store, in addition to the cellular telephone later returned by 2 "Michael Marcos." The record is bereft, however, of direct evidence establishing that the 3 relevant property was taken "by means of trespass." In addition, there was no evidence 4 showing that Johnson called the police to report any theft, that he protested any of the 5 pertinent charges with his credit card companies, or that he complained to his son about any 6 of the purchases. Moreover, as to the Circuit City cellular telephone purchase, discussed at 7 length above, the evidence presented showed that Johnson and petitioner visited the store 8 together, and that Johnson voluntarily purchased the cellular telephone. RT at 1099-1123.
9 The only circumstantial evidence supporting a theft by larceny theory was the evidence 10 admitted pursuant to Evidence Code section 1101(b) that petitioner had committed acts of 11 misconduct with respect to other individuals, and the testimony of Johnson's son that 12 Johnson's spending habits had changed. Evidence of Johnson's decision to start buying new 13 and more expensive items, even when considered with the 1101(b) evidence, is, without 14 more, insufficient for a reasonable fact-finder to conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that 15 those items were 'stolen', that is, taken without Johnson's consent. Accordingly, there was 16 insufficient evidence to convict petitioner of grand theft from Johnson on a larceny theory.

17 With respect to the theory of theft by false pretenses, a conviction requires proof that 18 (1) the defendant made a false pretense or representation to the owner of property, (2) with 19 the intent to defraud the owner of that property, and (3) the owner transferred the property 20 to the defendant in reliance on the representation. Wooten, 44 Cal. App. 4th at 1842-43.
21 The evidence that petitioner misrepresented his name to Johnson as "Michael Marco" is 22 sufficient to satisfy the first element, that petitioner made a false pretense or representation 23 to the owner of the property. Evidence of petitioner's conduct during his relationship with 24 Nicholas Brayevich, as well as evidence of his uncharged conduct with respect to Ned 25 Wyss, constitutes sufficient circumstantial evidence from which a rational juror could 26 conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that petitioner intended to defraud Johnson, satisfying 27 the second element.

1           However, there is insufficient evidence to satisfy the third element, namely that 2 reliance on the false representation. “A victim does not rely on a false representation if 3 'there is no causal connection shown between the [representation] alleged to be false' and 4 the transfer of property.” Id. Because the only false representation discernible from the 5 record pertinent to this charge is petitioner's misrepresentation of his name as "Michael 6 Marco," the record must contain evidence sufficient to establish that Johnson transferred 7 property to petitioner on that misrepresentation. A review of the record reveals no evidence 8 that Johnson relied on this particular fact when deciding to purchase gifts for petitioner and 9 co-defendant Miller. Respondent argues, and the state appellate court found, that evidence 10 of the change in Johnson's spending habits and of the other "schemes" engaged in by 11 petitioner and co-defendant Miller was sufficient to support petitioner's conviction. The 12 record reveals no causal connection, however, between Johnson's belief that petitioner's 13 name was "Michael Marco" and his decision to alter his spending habits. Of course, the 14 jury may have speculated that Johnson would not have made gifts to petitioner if he had 15 known that petitioner was lying about his name. While a conviction may properly rest upon 16 logical inferences drawn from circumstantial evidence, mere suspicion and speculation, 17 however, cannot support such logical inferences. Walters, 45 F.3d at 1358.<sup>12</sup> Evidence 18 relating to petitioner's interactions with other elderly gentlemen do not amount to proof of 19 Johnson's state of mind (as opposed to the state of mind of petitioner and Miller) when he 20 purchased the items for petitioner and Miller. As there was not sufficient evidence from 21 which a rational jury could find beyond a reasonable doubt that Johnson relied upon
24 25

27           <sup>12</sup>Nicholas Brayevich, for instance, admitted on cross-examination that, during his 28 relationship with Miller, he knew that she used multiple names. He testified that her use of different names did not diminish his affection for her or cause him to stop giving her (or petitioner) gifts. RT, p. 322, ll. 8-22.

1 petitioner's false representations, there was not sufficient evidence to support petitioner's
2 conviction for grand theft of Johnson based on a theory of theft by false pretenses.<sup>13</sup>

3 In sum, after viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, no 4 rational trier-of-fact could have found the essential elements of grand theft based upon 5 either a theory of larceny or of false pretenses. The state appellate court's decision to the 6 contrary amounted to an unreasonable application of clearly established United States 7 Supreme Court precedent within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d). Accordingly, 8 petitioner is entitled to federal habeas relief on his conviction of Count Five, namely grand 9 theft of Wilbur Johnson..

10 5. Admission of Uncharged Acts of Misconduct

11 Petitioner next contends that the trial judge violated his federal due process rights by 12 erroneously admitting into evidence the Wyss, Dodd, and McAllister incidents. The 13 admission of evidence is not subject to federal habeas review unless a specific 14 constitutional guarantee is violated or the error is of such magnitude that the result is a 15 denial of the fundamentally fair trial guaranteed by due process. See Henry v. Kernan, 197 16 F.3d 1021, 1031 (9th Cir. 1999). Failure to comply with state rules of evidence is neither a 17 necessary nor a sufficient basis for granting federal habeas relief on due process grounds.
18 Id. While adherence to state evidentiary rules suggests that the trial was conducted in a 19 procedurally fair manner, it is certainly possible to have a fair trial even when state 20 standards are violated; conversely, state procedural and evidentiary rules may countenance 21 processes that do not comport with fundamental fairness. Jammal v. Van de Kamp, 926 22 F.2d 918, 919 (9th Cir. 1991).

23 A habeas petitioner who challenges a state court's admission into evidence of prior 24 acts of misconduct is not entitled to habeas corpus relief unless the state court's admission

26 <sup>13</sup>Petitioner also argues that the evidence of Johnson's receipts and charge account 27 statements was not admitted for the truth of the matter asserted, and that there was no 28 showing that there was, "the actual payment of money by Wilbur Johnston for the amounts and items reflected in that paperwork." Petition, p. 22:8-10. In light of the conclusion reached herein, it is unnecessary for the court to address petitioner's additional arguments.

1 of this evidence violated the petitioner's federal due process right to a fair trial under the 2 Constitution. See Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 119 (1982). When evaluating the due 3 process claim, the habeas court considers the relevance of the evidence, the trial court's use 4 of limiting instructions, and the jury's ability to weigh the credibility of the witnesses to the 5 uncharged misconduct. Gordan v. Duran, 895 F.2d 610, 613 (9th Cir. 1990) (admission of 6 uncharged crimes did not violate due process where trial court gave limiting instruction to 7 jury, jury was able to weigh witnesses' credibility and evidence was relevant to the 8 defendant's intent)

9 Respondent first argues that the uncharged misconduct evidence was relevant under 10 Evidence Code § 1101 ("section 1101") to show petitioner and Miller's criminal intent.
11 Under section 1101, evidence of a prior crime or bad act is admissible so long as it shows 12 not only criminal disposition (i.e., bad character), but is relevant to prove a fact such as 13 motive, opportunity, intent, plan, or knowledge. Cal. Evid. Code § 1101(b); People v.
14 Ewoldt, 7 Cal. 4th 380, 393 (1994). To prove a violation of Penal Code section 487, the 15 theft statute under which petitioner was prosecuted as to both Nicholas Brayevich and 16 Wilbur Johnson, the government must prove that the defendant had a "specific intent to 17 defraud" the victim. CALJIC 14.10.

18 Petitioner contends that the uncharged acts were not admissible under section 1101 19 because the issue of intent was not in dispute at trial. Petition at 24:24-25:2. Petitioner 20 points to closing argument, when defense counsel argued that Brayevich had not been 21 defrauded, but rather that he, Miller, and petitioner had had mutually satisfying 22 relationships which brought companionship and sexual pleasure to Brayevich, and money 23 and material goods to his client and co-defendant. Trial counsel vigorously argued that 24 Brayevich's decision to part with his money was based on the satisfaction he received from 25 these relationships, rather than on the misrepresentations made by co-defendant and 26 petitioner.

1           While trial counsel may have tacitly conceded that his client was out to get all he 2 could from Brayevich, a morally distasteful state of mind, perhaps, but not necessarily a 3 criminal one, counsel did not concede, and the prosecution therefore had the burden to 4 prove, that petitioner specifically intended to defraud Mr. Brayevich in order to do so. This 5 is a critical distinction. Petitioner's reliance on People v. Bruce, 208 Cal. App. 3d 1099
6 (1989) to support his argument that evidence of the Wyss, McAllister and Dodd incidents 7 should not have been admitted pursuant to section 1101 is misplaced. In Bruce, the trial 8 court admitted evidence of an uncharged rape despite appellant's repeated and specific 9 disavowal of any defense other than actual consent by the victim; the appellate court 10 reversed Bruce's conviction, finding that the uncharged rape had no tendency to prove or 11 disprove whether the victim of the charged rape had consented to intercourse with the 12 appellant, and holding that the evidence was not admissible on the issue of appellant's intent 13 because appellant had not asserted a defense that put his state of mind at issue. Bruce, 208 14 Cal. App. 3d at 1105-06. As explained above, in the case at bar, petitioner's state of mind 15 was at issue because the prosecution had the burden of proving petitioner's intent to defraud 16 Mr. Brayevich.

17           Petitioner further argues that the charged incidents and uncharged incidents were so 18 dissimilar that the uncharged incidents evidence had no tendency to prove his intent with 19 regard to Mr. Brayevich. However, in the uncharged incidents, as in the charged incidents, 20 Miller (and petitioner, in the case of Ned Wyss) repeatedly misrepresented Miller's name 21 and her circumstances in an obvious attempt to make Miller more attractive and 22 sympathetic to elderly gentlemen, and to conceal her true identity.<sup>14</sup> This rendered the

24           <sup>14</sup>Petitioner also argues that it was error to admit evidence of the incidents involving 25 Dodd and McAllister because he "was in custody at the time of the incidents and was in no 26 way participating in those matters." Petition at 27:4-8. As the appellate court pointed out, 27 however:

27           The modus operandi of the criminal scheme in which both defendants 28 participated was that Miller would cast her lures into the victims' water and hook the victims when they bit. Harris would come along later and help gut and bleed them. Whether Harris was temporarily unable to personally bleed

1 evidence of the uncharged acts relevant to show petitioner's intent. "If a person acts 2 similarly in similar situations, he probably harbors the same intent in each instance . . . and 3 such prior conduct may be relevant circumstantial evidence of the actor's most recent intent.
4 The inference to be drawn is not that the actor is disposed to commit such acts; instead, the 5 inference to be drawn is that, in light of the first event, the actor, at the time of the second 6 event, must have had the intent attributed to him by the prosecution." People v. Gallego, 52 7 Cal. 3d 115, 171 (1991).

8 Respondent also asserts that the Wyss, Dodd, and McAllister incidents were 9 admissible to corroborate the testimony of Nicholas Brayevich. Petitioner disagrees, 10 arguing that the Wyss, Dodd, and McAllister incidents were insufficiently similar to the 11 Brayevich and Johnson incidents to provide corroboration.<sup>15</sup> For the reasons discussed 12 above, however, the testimony of Messrs. Wyss, Dodd, and McAllister is relevant (and 13 sufficient to corroborate) Brayevich's allegations that Miller and petitioner misrepresented 14 Miller's identity, residential status, and the nature of Miller's relationship with petitioner.
15 We reject petitioner's assertion to the contrary.

16 In sum, the evidence relating to the Wyss, Dodd, and McAllister incidents was 17 relevant both to show petitioner and Miller's intent under Evidence Code § 1101, and to 18 corroborate Brayevich's testimony. Moreover, the trial judge properly instructed the jury 19 that it was not to consider the uncharged misconduct to prove the bad character or 21 and gut Dodd and McAllister is irrelevant to the admissibility of the evidence.

22 Each incident reveals common characteristics shared by the schemes against all 23 the victims and establishes their frequency and success. "[T]he recurrence of a 24 similar result . . . tends (increasingly with each instance) to negative accident or 25 inadvertence or self-defense or good faith or other innocent mental state, and 26 tends to establish (provisionally, at least, though not certainly) the presence of 27 the normal, i.e., criminal, intent accompanying each such act ... People v.
Ewoldt, (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 380, 402, quoting 2 Wigmore, Evidence (Chadbourn 28 rev. ed. 1979) § 302, p. 241).
People v. Miller, No. H017020, Slip Op. at 22 (Cal.Ct.App. June 7, 2000).

<sup>15</sup> Petitioner makes this argument in the portion of his brief that argues that no competent evidence corroborated Brayevich's testimony regarding co-defendant Miller's oral false pretenses. Petition at 11:5 -13:17.

1 disposition of petitioner and Miller, but could only consider it as it related to the issue of 2 criminal intent. RT at 2544. Juries are presumed to follow the court's instructions. Weeks 3 v. Angelone, 528 U.S. 225, 234 (2000). In addition, the jury had an opportunity to observe 4 and weigh the credibility of Mssrs. Wyss, Dodd, and McAllister, all three of whom testified 5 in person at petitioner's trial. Consequently, petitioner's due process right to a fair trial was 6 not violated by the trial court's admission of evidence of the alleged uncharged acts of 7 misconduct.

8 Accordingly, petitioner is not entitled to habeas relief on this claim.

9 6. Sufficiency of Evidence Supporting Conviction for Attempting to Dissuade a 10 Witness

11 Petitioner next claims that there was insufficient evidence presented at trial to 12 support his conviction for attempting to dissuade Nicholas Brayevich from testifying in 13 furtherance of a conspiracy, pursuant to California Penal Code § 136.1. Petitioner advances 14 two arguments in support of this claim. First, petitioner asserts that he could not have been 15 acting in furtherance of a conspiracy to dissuade Brayevich because petitioner was in 16 custody at the time of the acts on which his conviction is based occurred. Second, he 17 contends that section 136.1 is not broad enough to encompass his conduct.

18 As explained above, a federal court reviewing collaterally a state court conviction
19 does not determine whether it is satisfied that the evidence established guilt beyond a 20 reasonable doubt. Payne, 982 F.2d at 338. The federal court "determines only whether, 21 'after viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, any rational trier 22 of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt.'" See id. (quoting Jackson, 443 U.S. at 319). Only if no rational trier of fact could have found 23 proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, may the writ be granted. See Jackson, 443 U.S. at 24 324.

25 The elements of the charge against petitioner for intimidating Brayevich from 26 testifying, in furtherance of a conspiracy, are as follows: (1) Nicholas Brayevich was a 27 witness or a victim; (2) another person, with the specific intent to do so, attempted to 28

1 prevent or dissuade Brayevich from (a) attending or giving testimony at any trial, 2 proceeding, or inquiry authorized by law, (b) making a report of such victimization to any 3 peace officer, (c) causing a complaint or other accusatory pleading to be sought and 4 prosecuted, and from assisting in the prosecution thereof, or (d) arresting or causing or 5 seeking the arrest of any person; (3) that person acted knowingly and maliciously; and (4) 6 the act of preventing, dissuading, or the attempt thereto was in furtherance of a conspiracy.

7 See Cal. Penal Code § 136.1(c)(2); CALJIC No. 7.15.

8 Petitioner first argues that he could not have been acting in furtherance of a 9 conspiracy when he telephoned Brayevich and asked him to drop the pending charges 10 because he was in custody when he made the call. Petitioner cites People v. Pic'l, 114 11 Cal.App.3d 824 (1991), disapproved of on other grounds by People v. Kimble, 44 Cal.3d 12 480 (1988), and People v. Saling, 7 Cal.3d 844 (1972), for the proposition that once some 13 of the co-conspirators have been arrested, the conspiracy has come to an end. He also 14 quotes Sandez v. United States, 239 F.2d 239 (9th Cir. 1956), which states, "[w]e think that 15 the moment of any conspirator's arrest is decisive as to him, even if it should be maintained 16 that the arrest of the first conspirator is not conclusive as to all. At that moment, the 17 conspiracy has been thwarted, and presumably no other overt act contributing to the 18 conspiracy can possibly take place at least so far as the arrested conspirator is concerned."
19 Petition at 31:21-32:3. Petitioner's reliance upon Pic'l, Saling, and Sandez is misplaced.
20 These cases stand at most for the proposition that when a defendant is arrested and placed in 21 custody such that he can perform no further acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, the 22 conspiracy (as to him) is deemed to have ended. These decisions do not, nor could they 23 sensibly, hold that the arrest of a conspirator halts a conspiracy when the object of the 24 conspiracy, such as dissuading a witness from testifying, can be accomplished or furthered 25 while the would-be conspirator is in custody. In this case, petitioner was equipped to - and 26 did - take steps towards dissuading Brayevich from testifying while he was in custody.
27 Accordingly, petitioner's arrest in this case did not preclude him from acting in furtherance

1 of the conspiracy, and there was thus sufficient evidence to prove this element of the 2 offense.

3         Petitioner next contends that his conduct did not fall within the scope of California 4 Penal Code § 136.1. Petitioner telephoned Brayevich from custody on September 16, 1995, 5 and said such things as "Nick, are you gonna come to court? We already have enough 6 problems as it is"; "Oh, so they are gonna press charges? So that's what you're doing Nick?
7 Is that what you're gonna do?"; "Well can you drop whatever it is?" ; "Can you just drop 8 whatever it is they want you to do?"; "Can you drop whatever they want you to do?"; "Drop 9 the charges?"<sup>16</sup> Answer, Ex. C. Petitioner argues that, "neither a victim, nor a witness, can 10 dictate to the prosecution to 'drop the charges'. Thus, on its face [petitioner's] request to 11 Brayevich was a legal impossibility." Petition at 30: 20-22. Petitioner also argues that, 12 because he was already being investigated for his role in the Brayevich theft at the time he 13 called Brayevich, "there is nothing in [his] conduct which would in any way dissuade or 14 prevent Brayevich from being a witness, from making a report, from causing an accusatory 15 pleading to be sought, from assisting in the prosecution of that accusatory pleading, [or] 16 from causing or seeking the arrest of petitioner." Petition at 30:25 - 31:4.

17         The California appellate court rejected this claim as follows:

18         A review of the evidence lays this hopeful but sophistical argument to rest.
19         Harris's telephone call to Brayevich plainly asks Brayevich to "drop charges", i.e. for him to 20 "attempt[] to prevent or dissuade any witness . . . from attending or giving testimony at any trial, proceeding, or inquiry authorized by law." (§ 136.1, subd. (a)(2).) Substantial evidence supported the conviction.

21 Slip Op. at 25. During the September 16, 1995, conversation petitioner clearly attempted to 22 convince Brayevich to refrain from attending and testifying at any future court proceedings 23 . It was not necessary for the prosecution to demonstrate the precise existence of the 24 proceeding at which Brayevich would be called as a witness. Moreover, "there is . . . no 25 talismanic requirement that a defendant must say 'Don't testify' or words tantamount thereto, 26 in order to commit the charged [offense]... As long as his words or actions support the 27 _____

28 <sup>16</sup>Brayevich recorded this conversation and the recording was played for the jury.

1 inference that he attempted . . .to induce a person to withhold testimony, a defendant is 2 properly convicted of a violation of section 136.1". People v. Mendoza, 69 Cal.Rptr.2d 3 728, 735 (1997), superseded by statute on other grounds.

4 In addition to examining the two specific arguments advanced by petitioner in 5 support of this claim, the court has also independently reviewed the record, including a 6 transcript of the taped telephone call made by petitioner to Brayevich on September 16, 7 1995. (Answer, Ex. C.) The record contains ample evidence from which a jury could 8 rationally infer that petitioner attempted to dissuade Brayevich from testifying in 9 furtherance of a conspiracy. Therefore, the state appellate court's decision was neither 10 contrary to clearly established United States Supreme Court precedent, or involved an 11 unreasonable application of such precedent. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d).

12 Petitioner is not entitled to habeas relief on this claim.

13
14 7. Failure To Instruct On Lesser-Included Offense

15 Petitioner claims that the trial court violated his constitutional right to due process 16 by failing to instruct the jury on a lesser-included offense. As discussed above, petitioner 17 was convicted of the felony offense of attempting to dissuade a witness in furtherance of a 18 conspiracy in violation of California Penal Code section 136.1(c)(2). Petitioner was not 19 charged with, and the trial court did not sua sponte instruct on, the lesser-included offense 20 of 'misdemeanor'<sup>17</sup> attempting to dissuade a witness under California Penal Code section 21 136.1(b). The California appellate court rejected petitioner's federal due process claim, 22 finding that there is no federal constitutional violation based on a failure to instruct on a 23 lesser-included offense in a non-capital case.

26

27 misdemeanor or a felony with a maximum sentence of three years. Subdivision (c) of section 28 136.1, the offense for which petitioner was charged and convicted, makes commission of an act set forth in subdivision (b) a felony punishable by a prison term of two, three, or four years if the act is "in furtherance of a conspiracy." Cal. Penal Code § 136.1(c)(2).

1           Although the Supreme Court has held that a failure to instruct on a lesser-included
2 offense may be constitutional error in a capital case, Beck v. Alabama, 447 U.S. 625, 638
3 (1980), it has not extended this holding to non-capital cases. The Ninth Circuit accordingly 4 has held that the failure of a state trial court to instruct on lesser-included offenses in a non-5 capital case does not present a federal constitutional claim. See Solis v. Garcia, 219 F.3d 6 922, 929 (9th Cir. 2000). Therefore, petitioner is precluded from federal habeas relief on 7 this claim.<sup>18</sup>

8           8.       Instructions Defining Conduct and Mental State Necessary for Section 9                   136.1(c)(2) Conviction

10           Petitioner next contends that the trial court gave conflicting and confusing 11 instructions as to the conduct and mental state necessary for a conviction under section 12 136.1(c)(2). He claims that the instructions were so confusing that they violated his right to 13 due process.

14           A challenge to a jury instruction solely as an error under state law does not state a 15 claim cognizable in federal habeas corpus proceedings. See Estelle v. McGuire, 502 U.S.
16 62, 71-72 (1991). To obtain federal collateral relief for error in the jury charge, a petitioner

18           <sup>18</sup>The Ninth Circuit has observed that a "defendant's right to adequate jury instructions 19 on his or her theory of the case might, in some cases, constitute an exception to the general 20 rule" that the failure of a state trial court to instruct on lesser-included offenses in a non-21 capital case does not present a federal constitutional claim. Solis, 219 F.3d at 929 (citation 22 omitted). This observation is not, however, based on clearly established Supreme Court precedent within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1). See, e.g., Gilmore v. Taylor, 508 U.S. 333, 343-44 (1993) (rejecting claim that allegedly defective jury instructions violated defendant's constitutional right to a meaningful opportunity to present a defense because the cases in which Court has invoked this principle dealt either with the exclusion of evidence or the testimony of a defense witness).

23           In any event, petitioner would be entitled to habeas relief only if he could establish 24 that the instructional error had a "substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining 25 the jury's verdict", or, in other words, that the error "resulted in actual prejudice". Brecht v.
26 Abrahamson, 507 U.S. 619, 938 (1993). Petitioner's prejudice argument is premised upon 27 his assertion that he would have been convicted of only a misdemeanor because there was no 28 evidence introduced at trial establishing that his dissuasion attempt was "in furtherance of a conspiracy." As discussed above, however, the evidence showed that, prior to petitioner's arrest, petitioner and Miller acted in tandem to manipulate Brayevich, petitioner and Miller's respective attempts at dissuasion were made close in time, petitioner called Miller from custody (and spoke with her at some length) on the same day he called Brayevich, Answer, Exhibits C, D, E; RT, at. 649-50, 856, 1957-68, 1973-76. This amounted to ample evidence that petitioner and Miller conspired to dissuade Brayevich from testifying.

1 must show that the ailing instruction by itself so infected the entire trial that the resulting 2 conviction violates due process. See id. at 72. The defined category of infractions that 3 violate fundamental fairness is very narrow: "Beyond the specific guarantees enumerated in 4 the Bill of Rights, the Due Process Clause has limited operation." Id. at 73.

5 The trial court instructed the jury in the language of the statute as follows:

6 Section 136.1(c)(2) provides [that]:

7 A) Any person who does any of the following is guilty of a crime:

8 1. Knowingly and maliciously prevents or dissuades any witness or 9 victim from attending or giving testimony at any trial, proceeding or inquiry authorized by law.

10 2. Knowingly and maliciously attempts to prevent or dissuade any 11 witness or victim from attending or giving testimony at any trial, proceeding, or inquiry authorized by law.

12 (B) Every person who attempts to prevent or dissuade another person 13 who has been the victim of a crime or who is witness to a crime from doing any of the following is guilty of a crime:

14 1. Making any report of such victimization to any peace officer or 15 state or local law enforcement officer or probation or parole or correctional officer or prosecuting agency or to any judge.

16 2. Causing a complaint, indictment, information, probation or parole violation to be sought and prosecuted and assisting in the prosecution thereof.

17 3. Arresting or causing or seeking the arrest of any person in 18 connection with such victimization.

19 Every person doing any of the acts described in (A) or (B) knowingly and maliciously under any one or more of the following circumstances is 20 guilty of a felony under any of the following circumstances:

21 Where the act is in furtherance of a conspiracy.

22 Every person attempting the commission of a act -- strike that.

23 Every person attempting the commission of any act described in 24 (A)(B) and (C) is guilty of the offense attempted without regard to success or failure of such attempt. The fact that no person was injured physically, or in 25 fact intimidated, shall be no defense against any prosecution under this section.

26 In order to prove such crime, the following elements must be proved:

27 1. That a person knowingly and maliciously prevented or dissuaded or 28 attempted to prevent or dissuade another person who has been the victim of a

1 crime or a witness to a crime from doing one of the acts described in (A) and 2 (B) above, and,

3 2. The act was in furtherance of a conspiracy.

4 The word 'knowingly' means with knowledge of the existence of the 5 facts in question. Knowledge of the unlawfulness of an act or omission is not 6 required. A requirement of knowledge does not mean that the act must be 7 done with any specific intent.

8 The word 'maliciously' means a wish to vex, annoy or injure another 9 person or an intent to do a wrongful act.

10 RT at 2552-2554.

11 . . .

12 In the crimes charged in counts 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the information 13 and any allegation of excessive taking in count 1, there must exist a union or 14 joint operation of act or conduct and a certain specific intent in the mind of 15 the perpetrator. Unless such specific intent exists the crime or allegation to 16 which it relates is not committed.

17 The specific intent required in counts 2, 3 and 4 is the intent to prevent 18 or dissuade the victim or witness from doing one of the acts described in the 19 definition of the crime charged in those counts.

20 RT at 2559-60.

21 Petitioner first argues that the trial court gave the jury a "very mixed message" as to 22 what conduct constitutes a violation of section 136.1(c)(2). He concedes that the court 23 correctly instructed that a "violation of subdivision (c)(2) would occur if the conduct 24 described in subdivisions (a) and (b) was done in furtherance of a conspiracy." Petition 25 35:16-18. He contends, however, that immediately prior to giving the correct instruction, 26 the court incorrectly instructed the jury that a verdict of guilty could be returned if any of 27 the conduct in subdivisions (a), (b), or (c)(2) occurred. Petition at 35:19-25. Petitioner 28 argues that the allegedly conflicting instructions may have confused the jury regarding the conduct necessary for a conviction.

The appellate court rejected petitioner's claim, finding, after consideration of the entire charge to the jury, that there was not a reasonable likelihood that the jury misinterpreted the trial court's instructions in a way potentially unfavorable to the defense.
Slip Op. at 25-27. This decision was not contrary to federal law, within the meaning of 28

1 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1) because the appellate court applied the correct federal standard to 2 petitioner's claim. See Estelle v. McGuire, 502 U.S. at 72 & n.4 (when deciding whether an 3 arguably ambiguous instruction is erroneous, the appropriate inquiry is "whether there is a 4 'reasonable likelihood' that the jury has applied the challenged instruction in a way that 5 violates the Constitution.").

6 The California appellate court also reasonably applied the applicable federal law 28 7 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1). Petitioner assails the portion of the instruction that states that, 8 "[e]very person attempting the commission of any act described in (A)(B) and (C) is guilty 9 of the offense attempted without regard to success or failure of such attempt." RT, p. 2554.
10 He contends, in essence, that there is a reasonable likelihood that the jury interpreted 11 "(A)(B) and (C)" to mean (A) or (B) or (C). Even when viewing the disputed language in 12 isolation, petitioner's interpretation is a strained one. Moreover, it is well established that 13 the assailed instruction, "may not be judged in artificial isolation", but must be considered 14 in the context of the instructions as a whole and the trial record. Cupp v. Naughten, 414 15 U.S. 141, 147 (1973). Here, immediately after instruction with the (arguably) ambiguous 16 language, the trial court correctly and clearly set out the elements of the statute. While the 17 instruction was not as clear as it might have been, when the instruction is read in the context 18 of the all of the instructions, there is not a reasonable likelihood that the jury interpreted this 19 instruction as permitting them to convict petitioner of violating section 136.1(c)(2) simply 20 by virtue of committing any act "in furtherance of a conspiracy." Cal. Penal Code § 21 136.1(c)(2). Consequently, the appellate court correctly applied Estelle's 'reasonable 22 likelihood' standard.

23 Petitioner next contends that the trial court gave contradictory instructions regarding 24 the mental state necessary for a section 136.1 conviction. He argues that by defining 25 'knowingly' and 'maliciously', the court gave three different definitions of the necessary 26 mental state, and that two of the definitions were erroneous: "[i]n short, the trial court 27 presented to the jury three different concepts as to the issue of intent in connection with a 28 violation of section 136.1 of the California Penal Code. One was the correct concept (i.e. a

1 specific intent to prevent or dissuade), while the other two were the wrong concepts (i.e., (a) 2 an intent to do any wrongful act, and (b) no specific intent at all. Clearly, these 3 contradictory instructions on specific intent, any wrongful act, and no specific intent at all, 4 reasonably could have led the jury into a state of total confusion as to the necessary intent 5 for a violation of section 136.1 of the California Penal Code." Petition at 37:3-14.

6 Again applying the 'reasonable likelihood' standard, the California appellate court 7 rejected this argument as follows:

8 [T]he trial court correctly instructed the jury on the perpetrator's mental 9 state: the acts must be committed both knowingly and maliciously and with a 10 stated specific intent. It correctly defined "knowingly" and "maliciously."
11 The court stated that "knowingly" does not require any specific intent, but it 12 also stated that "maliciously required an intent to do a wrongful act." It 13 further instructed that the specific intent to dissuade a victim from doing one 14 of the specified acts was necessary. The court did not tell the jury that these 15 requirements were in the disjunctive. The plain meaning of the instructions 16 was that the act must be both knowing, i.e., with knowledge of the 17 surrounding circumstances, and with the intent to dissuade. As respondent 18 says, '[t]he two mental states are distinct -- one could act with an intent to 19 dissuade but without sufficient knowledge of the circumstances. On the other 20 hand, one could have knowledge of the circumstances, but no particular intent 21 to dissuade.'

22 The relevant concepts were correctly defined for the jury. There was 23 no error.

24 People v. Miller, No. H017020, Slip Op. at 28 (Cal.Ct.App. June 7, 2000).

25 The trial court did not error by defining the concepts of knowingly and maliciously.
26 Under California law, trial courts are required to define 'knowingly' and 'maliciously' in 27 section 136.1 prosecutions. People v. Hallock, 208 Cal.App.3d 595, 610 (1989).
28 Moreover, the unambiguous meaning of the instructions was that petitioner could not be convicted under section 136.1 unless he had a specific intent to dissuade Brayevich from testifying. Therefore, there is no reasonable likelihood that the jury interpreted the instructions as not requiring that intent.

Accordingly, petitioner is not entitled to habeas relief on this claim.

9. Failure to Adequately Instruct Jury on Definition of Attempt

Petitioner next claims that the trial court's instructions did not adequately inform the jury of the possibility of convicting petitioner of attempting to dissuade a witness.

1 First, petitioner first argues that, because Brayevich was not actually prevented or 2 dissuaded from testifying or otherwise assisting the prosecution, the jurors should have 3 been instructed with CALJIC 6.00 -- which instruction would have permitted them to find 4 petitioner guilty only of an attempted violation of section 136.1. The California appellate 5 court rejected this argument as follows:

6 [T]here was no obligation on the trial court, as both defendants claim, 7 to instruct sua sponte "on an attempt to commit a crime." (CALJIC 6.00) The 8 evidence does not show an attempted crime, namely that with the specific 9 intent to dissuade a witness, each performed a direct ineffectual act toward the 10 commission of the crime of dissuading or attempting to dissuade a witness.
11 (Cf. CALJIC No. 6.00) The evidence shows a completed crime. Each 12 defendant rang up Brayevich and asked him to drop charges. Brayevich's 13 refusal to cooperate did not make their conduct either more criminal or less criminal. The 14 Slip. Op. at 24. As correctly explained by the appellate court, petitioner violated section 15 136.1 by attempting to dissuade Brayevich from testifying, regardless of whether Brayevich 16 was so dissuaded. As the jury was instructed, it is immaterial whether the attempt to 17 dissuade was successful. See CALJIC No. 7.15. As the record does not support an 18 argument that petitioner only attempted to attempt to dissuade Brayevich, there was no need 19 for an instruction on attempt.

20 Petitioner next argues that even if CALJIC 6.00 was not required, the trial court had 21 a duty to clarify the meaning of section 136.1's attempt element, specifically as to the 22 requirements of "intent" and an "act" in furtherance of that intent (not merely preparatory in 23 nature). Under California law, a trial court "has no sua sponte<sup>19</sup> duty to give amplifying or 24 clarifying instructions . . . where the terms used in the instructions given are 'commonly 25 understood by those familiar with the English language.'" People v. Richie 28 Cal.App.4th 26 1347, 1360 (1994). Petitioner has presented no authority suggesting that the word 27 "attempt" is not commonly understood by those familiar with the English language. The 28 word attempt connotes the intent to accomplish its subject and an act not preparatory in nature

<sup>19</sup> Petitioner argues that the trial court should have instructed the jury on the definition of attempt "even without a request" and "on its own". Petition at 40:19-20.

1 -- both in law and in ordinary language. See generally People v. Lyons, 235 Cal.App.3d
2 1456, 1461 (1991). Accordingly, petitioner has not established that the trial court's failure 3 to define attempt was erroneous.

4 Moreover, petitioner has not established that any error in failing to define attempt "so 5 infected" the section 136.1 portion of his trial "that the resulting conviction violates due 6 process." See Estelle v. McGuire, 502 U.S. 62, 72 (1991). A habeas petitioner whose claim 7 involves a failure to give a particular instruction bears an "especially heavy burden."
8 Villafuerte v. Stewart, 111 F.3d 616, 624 (9th Cir. 1997). A review of the trial transcript, 9 including the closing arguments and jury instructions, reveals that petitioner cannot meet 10 this heavy burden.

11 Accordingly, petitioner is not entitled to habeas relief on this claim.

12 13 10. Sufficiency of Evidence Supporting Escape Conviction

14 Petitioner next claims that there was insufficient evidence to support his escape 15 conviction. In particular, he alleges that the prosecution failed to establish that he was, 16 "arrested and booked" on a felony as required by California Penal Code § 4532. The 17 elements of the crime of escape under Penal Code section 4532(b)(1) are: (1) a person has 18 been either arrested and booked for, or charged with, or convicted of, a felony; (2) that 19 person has been either confined in jail, or placed in the lawful custody of an officer; and (3) 20 that person escaped, or attempted escape from said jail or custody. CALJIC 7.30; Cal.
21 Penal Code § 4532(b)(1). At trial, the prosecution admitted into evidence a 'jail I.D. sheet' 22 to establish that petitioner was booked. Petitioner argues, however, that the prosecution 23 failed to lay an adequate foundation for the use of this sheet under the official record 24 exception to the hearsay rule, and that in the absence of this sheet, insufficient evidence 25 existed to establish the booking element.

26 Respondent contends that this portion of petitioner's insufficiency of evidence claim 27 is procedurally defaulted. The appellate court ruled that petitioner's trial counsel's failure to 28 object to the adequacy of the foundation for the 'jail I.D. Sheet' waived this claim pursuant

1 to Evidence Code section 353. As explained above, Evidence Code § 353 has been found 2 to be both independent and adequate for the purposes of federal habeas procedural default
3 analysis. Melendez v. Plier, 288 F.3d 1120, 1125 (9th Cir. 2001); Bonin v. Calderon, 59 4 F.3d 815, 842-43 (9th Cir. 1995); see generally Coleman, 501 U.S. at 750 (claim is 5 procedurally defaulted from federal habeas review if state courts rejected it based on 6 independent and adequate state procedural rule). Accordingly, petitioner's claim that the 7 prosecution laid an inadequate foundation for admissibility of the 'jail I.D. sheet' is 8 procedurally defaulted pursuant to an independent and adequate state procedural rule.
9 Accordingly, we do not reach the merits of this claim.<sup>20</sup>

10 Petitioner next argues that insufficient evidence established that he was "arrested".
11 The California appellate court addressed this claim as follows:

12 [Petitioner] claims that although there was evidence that he had been 13 "booked," there was no evidence that he had been "'arrested' in relation to that 14 booking." Harris relied on People v. Francisco, (1964) 228 Cal.App.2d 355, 358, for the proposition that evidence of the "arrest" must appear in the record and may not be inferred from the fact that [petitioner] was in custody.

15 The I.D. sheet shows an arrest date of February 14, 1996, at 150 West 16 Hedding Street in San Jose at 2:05 p.m. Four charges are listed, among them grand theft and dissuading a witness. They are designated felonies on the sheet. Bail is set at $1 million. Two warrant numbers are listed. Additional 17 evidence of an FBI Officer who interviewed Harris in the Beverly Hills jail in an attempt to find [co-defendant] Miller revealed that [petitioner] was first 18 arrested on the San Jose fraud case on warrants from Santa Clara County in June. Finally, the I.D. sheet shows that the Los Angeles Sheriff's Department was the transporting agency.

19 This is not the clearest evidence that Harris was arrested on the felony 20 charges for which he was booked, and it takes some piecing together, but it is sufficient to support conviction of the crime. First, the evidence is credible 21 and trustworthy. It is based on the document generated in the ordinary course when an inmate is booked into the jail and on the testimonial evidence of the 22 FBI officer. The testimony established that Harris was arrested in June in Beverly Hills on Santa Clara County warrants alleging fraud and that he was 23 placed in the Beverly Hills jail. The Santa Clara County jail I.D. sheet shows that Harris was transported to Santa Clara by the Los Angeles Sheriff's 24 Department and that the Santa Clara County jail on Hedding Street booked him in at 2:05 p.m. on February 14, 1996, on four charges including grand 25 theft and dissuading a witness. Bail was set at $1 million. This evidence is sufficient to show that [petitioner] was "arrested."

27 <sup>20</sup>Petitioner submits no evidence and makes no argument supporting his conclusory 28 assertion that he is actually innocent of the escape conviction, and thus the "miscarriage of justice" exception to procedural default, discussed above, does not apply.

1 Slip Op. at 34-35.

2 The appellate court's reasoning establishes persuasively that there was sufficient 3 evidence that petitioner was “arrested in relation to the crimes for which he was booked.”
4 Further, the court has independently reviewed those portions of the record relating to 5 petitioner's escape conviction and have found sufficient evidence supported the booking and 6 arrest elements. In addition, the evidence admitted on the remaining two elements (that 7 petitioner was confined in a county jail, and that he escaped from that jail) was 8 overwhelming. Petitioner has failed to establish that the state appellate court's decision was 9 contrary to clearly established United States Supreme Court precedent, or involved an 10 unreasonable application of such precedent. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d).

11 Accordingly, petitioner is not entitled to habeas relief on this claim.

12 13 11. Admission of Hearsay Evidence

14 Petitioner also argues that the trial court's admission of hearsay statements by his 15 escape co-conspirator Jamie Owen violated both his Sixth Amendment right to confront 16 and cross-examine witnesses and his right to federal due process. Five hearsay statements 17 by Owen were admitted at trial through the testimony of prosecution witnesses Dana 18 Mulvani and Sergeant Brian Arrington. Petitioner's trial counsel objected to admission of 19 the statements on hearsay grounds. The prosecution argued that the statements fell within 20 the “declaration against interest” exception to the hearsay rule because Owen was 21 subsequently charged with and convicted for petitioner's escape. After requiring the 22 prosecution to show that the statements were made prior to petitioner's arrest (on the escape 23 charge), the trial court overruled petitioner's trial counsel's objections and admitted the 24 hearsay statements.

25 On direct appeal, petitioner challenged the admission of Owen’s statements on three 26 grounds. Petitioner argued that the statements should not have been admitted under the 27 “declaration against interest” exception because the prosecution did not establish that Owen 28 was unavailable as a witness (the “unavailability argument”). He also argued that the 1 statements did not qualify under that hearsay exception because they were not in fact 2 against Owen's interest, and he argued that admission of the statements violated the 3 Confrontation Clause.

4 Respondent argues here that petitioner's claim is procedurally defaulted because the 5 state appellate court found that petitioner waived all his arguments challenging the 6 admissibility of Owen's hearsay statements, and also rejected these arguments on the merits.
7 When the state court denies a petition on the merits and as procedurally barred, the claims 8 raised in that petition are procedurally barred if the cited procedural bar is an independent 9 and adequate state ground for decision. See Bennett v. Mueller, 322 F.3d 573, 580 (9th Cir.
10 2002). By contrast, where a state court decision lacks a clear and express statement that the 11 state court is relying on the procedural bar as a separate basis for the decision as to each 12 claim, the district court may reach the merits of the claim. See Siripongs v. Calderon, 35 13 F.3d 1308, 1316 (9th Cir. 1994). The appellate court found that petitioner's failure to object 14 at trial to the lack of proof that Owen was unavailable as a witness waived the issue on 15 appeal pursuant to Evidence Code § 353. Accordingly, petitioner has procedurally 16 defaulted the unavailability argument portion of this claim. See Melendez, 288 F.3d at 17 1125. By contrast, it is not clear that the appellate court found that petitioner waived his 18 two other arguments challenging the admission of the such statements, namely his argument 19 that their admission violated due process because Owen's statements were not in fact 20 against interest, and his argument that their admission violated the Confrontation Clause.
21 Accordingly, petitioner has not procedurally defaulted these two alternative arguments, and 22 the court will consider them on their merits. See Siripongs, 35 F.3d at 1316.

23 The appellate court ruled that one of Owen's five statements was admissible under 24 the hearsay exception for declarations against penological interest, while the other four 25 were admissible under different hearsay exceptions: three statements were admissible as 26 statements of a party declarant (Evidence Code § 1220), and one statement was admissible 27 as a statement of the declarant's then existing mental state offered to explain acts or conduct 28 of the declarant (Evidence Code § 1250(a)(2)). Slip Op. at 40. In the instant habeas

1 petition, however, petitioner merely repeats the argument made on direct appeal that the 2 admission of all five of the statements violate his rights of confrontation and due process 3 because they do not constitute declarations against interest. Petitioner does not contest the 4 appellate court's finding that four of the statements were admissible under alternative 5 hearsay exceptions, nor does he argue that their admission under such exceptions violated 6 his due process or Sixth Amendment rights. Accordingly, the court has no occasion to 7 decide whether the admission of the four hearsay statements found to be admissible 8 pursuant to hearsay exceptions other than the exception for declarations against interest 9 violated petitioner's right to due process or his right of confrontation under the Sixth 10 Amendment.

11 The only statement by Owen that the state appellate court found to be a "declaration 12 against interest" was Owen's statement that "that Owen gave [petitioner] his booking 13 sheet." Slip Op. at 40. The appellate court reasoned that, "[the statement] establishes one 14 fact tending to show Owen's participation in the crime, that is, Owen's transfer to 15 [petitioner] of knowledge that enabled [petitioner] to unlawfully obtain his release from 16 jail." Id. The admission of this statement violated neither the Confrontation Clause nor 17 petitioner's right to due process.

18 With respect to the Confrontation Clause, in Ohio v. Roberts, the United States 19 Supreme Court held that the veracity of hearsay statements is sufficiently dependable to 20 allow the untested admission of such statements against an accused when (1) "the evidence 21 falls within a firmly rooted hearsay exception" or (2) it contains "particularized guarantees 22 of trustworthiness" such that adversarial testing would be expected to add little, if anything, 23 to the statements' reliability.<sup>21</sup> 448 U.S. 56 (1980). In Lilly v. Virginia, 527 U.S. 116
24 (1999), the Court was directly presented with the question of whether the declaration

25
26 <sup>21</sup>Ohio v. Roberts was overruled by the United States Supreme Court in Crawford v.
27 Washington, 124 S. Ct. 1354 (2004). However, Crawford announced a "new rule" for 28 purposes of Teague analysis, and that rule does not come within the exception to the Teague non-retroactivity rule for "watershed rules." Whorton v. Bockting, 127 S. Ct. 1173, 1184 (2007) (applying Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 310-316 (1989)). Crawford therefore does not apply retroactively on collateral attack. Id.

1 against penal interest exception to the hearsay rule constitutes a firmly rooted hearsay 2 exception. The Court<sup>22</sup> stated that, due to the broadness of the label, the category of 3 "'declaration[s] against penal interest' . . . defines too large a class for meaningful 4 Confrontation Clause analysis." Id. at 127 (citations omitted). The Court therefore divided 5 statements against interest into three subcategories: (1) voluntary admissions against the 6 declarant; (2) exculpatory evidence offered by a defendant who claims that the declarant 7 committed, or was involved in, the offense, and (3) evidence offered by the prosecution to 8 establish the guilt of an alleged accomplice of the declarant. Id.

9 Owen's statement regarding his booking sheet falls into the third subcategory, i.e. a 10 confession of an accomplice implicating the defendant, as did the statement at issue in 11 Lilly. The Court concluded that such statements "are not within a firmly rooted hearsay 12 exception as that concept has been defined in our Confrontation Clause jurisprudence." Id.
13 at 134.<sup>23</sup> The Court reached this conclusion by reasoning that:

14 when an alleged accomplice testifies, his confession that 'incriminate[s] 15 himself together with defendant . . . ought to be received with suspicion, and 16 with the very greatest care and caution, and ought not to be passed upon by the jury under the same rules governing other and apparently credible witnesses.

17 . . . It is clear that our cases consistently have viewed an accomplice's 18 statements that shift or spread the blame to a criminal defendant as falling 19 outside the realm of those "hearsay exception[s] [that are] so trustworthy that 20 adversarial testing can be expected to add little to [the statements'] reliability."

21
22 <sup>22</sup>Although Lilly is a plurality decision, the Ninth Circuit has viewed the case as 23 binding precedent and "clearly established federal law" for purposes of AEDPA. See Forn v.
Hornung, 343 F.3d 990, 995, n.4 (2003) (citing Hernandez v. Small, 282 F.3d 1132, 1140 (9th Cir. 2002).

24 <sup>23</sup>The state appellate court found no Confrontation Clause violation in the admission 25 of this statement on the grounds that the "declaration against interest' exception is firmly 26 rooted." Slip Op. at 37. However, as Owen's statement falls within the third Lilly 27 subcategory, the state appellate court's decision on this issue was "contrary to" clearly 28 established federal law under 28 U.S.C. § 224(d)(1). Lilly, 527 U.S. at 116; 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d). However, for the reasons discussed below, the admission of Owen's statement does not violate the Confrontation Clause because contains "particularized guarantees of trustworthiness" such that the statement may be considered inherently reliable. See Roberts, 448 U.S. at 66; Forn, 343 F.3d at 996.

1 Id. at 131-133. (citations omitted). Although the Lilly opinion states that a “third 2 subcategory” statement is not admissible as a statement falling within a “firmly rooted 3 hearsay exception,” it does not preclude such a statement from being admitted under 4 Roberts' "particularized guarantees of trustworthiness" standard. Lilly, 527 U.S. at 134, n.5.
5 Therefore, admission of an accomplice's confession inculcating the defendant does not 6 violate the Confrontation Clause if (and only if) the statement bears particularized 7 guarantees of trustworthiness.

8 The appellate court described the circumstances under which Owen's statement was 9 made as follows:

10 In the instant case, Owen made two statements to Arrington. The first 11 was in the early morning hours of February 16, 1996, after Harris was released 12 and Owen wanted out, too. Owen stated ‘that he was asleep and had missed 13 his call for to be released [sic] and had lost his wristband.’

14 Arrington spoke to Owen on a later occasion. At that time Owen said 15 ‘he had made arrangements with Mr. Harris to switch identities because he 16 would still be getting released . . . He just said that Mr. Harris had told him 17 that they had no grounds to hold him any longer, that he would be released 18 when they realized their mistake.’ Owen said Harris ‘had promised him some 19 money or amount’ but Arrington testified that he could not remember the 20 amount. Arrington also stated that Owen said ‘Mr. Harris had threatened 21 [Owen's] family if he would go back on the deal that they had made . .
22 .[Harris] had knowledge from [Owen's] booking sheet of where he lived.’

23 Slip Op. at 38.<sup>24</sup>

24 The appellate court's description of the facts reveals that Owen’s statement about the 25 booking sheet occurred during his second conversation with Sergeant Arrington-- the 26 conversation during which Owen also told Arrington that petitioner had threatened to harm 27 Owen's family if Owen did not follow through with their escape plan. Owen's statements 28 made during this conversation, in particular the statement that petitioner had threatened to harm his family, suggest that Owen was speaking with the intent of inculcating petitioner and the hope of receiving leniency for his own actions. It is true that most of the statements

<sup>24</sup>Because a statement must possess 'sufficient indicia of trustworthiness' to fall within California’s “declaration against interest” hearsay exception, the California appellate court evaluated the trustworthiness of Owen's statement when determining whether the statement fell within that exception. This analysis may not be coextensive with the Confrontation Clause trustworthiness analysis in Roberts. Moreover, for the reasons set forth below, the court finds that the statement was not trustworthy.

1 made by Owen in this conversation with Arrington inculpated himself as well as petitioner
2 in the escape. But, "[o]ne of the most effective ways to lie is to mix falsehood with truth, 3 especially truth that seems particularly persuasive because of its self-inculpatory nature."
4 Williamson v. United States, 512 U.S. 594, 599-600 (1994). This can mean not only 5 interspersing exculpatory statements with inculpatory ones, but also making statements that 6 are both exculpatory and inculpatory at the same time. Lilly was concerned with 7 accomplice attempts at either "shifting or spreading" Forn, 343 F.3d at 997 (citing Lilly, 8 527 U.S. at 133) (emphasis in original).

9 It is true that Dana Mulvani offered a nearly identical account of the Harris-Owen 10 transaction in the jail dormitory. The Lilly court, however, explicitly rejected the argument 11 that the trustworthiness of a statement could be judged in relation to other corroborating 12 evidence, finding it "irrelevant" that other evidence at trial corroborated the declaration at 13 issue. Lilly, 527 U.S. at 137-38. This principle was first announced in Idaho v. Wright, 14 497 U.S. 805, 822 (1990), when the Court, interpreting the Confrontation Clause, held that 15 "hearsay evidence used to convict a defendant must possess indicia of reliability by virtue 16 of its inherent trustworthiness, not by reference to other evidence at trial." As a result, the 17 corroboration provided by Mulvani's statement is irrelevant to the trustworthiness of 18 Owen's statement for purposes of the Confrontation Clause analysis.

19 Because Owen's statement about the booking sheet was made to the authorities 20 during the same conversation as other statements whose purpose was transparently to "shift 21 or spread" blame, and because Mulvani's corroborating testimony is irrelevant under Lilly, 22 we find that the statement did not bear "particularized guarantees of trustworthiness" under 23 Roberts. Thus, as the 'booking sheet' statement neither falls within a firmly rooted hearsay 24 exception nor contains particularized guarantees of trustworthiness, its admission, without 25 an opportunity to cross-examine Owen, violated petitioner's rights under the Confrontation 26 Clause.

27 This does not end our analysis, however. In order to determine whether petitioner is 28 entitled to habeas relief as a result of the Confrontation Clause violation, the court must

1 conduct a harmless error analysis. See Delaware v. Van Arsdall, 475 U.S. 673, 681-84
2 (1986). Under Brecht v. Abrahamson, habeas relief is proper only if any error by the state 3 courts properly subject to harmless error analysis "had substantial and injurious effect or 4 influence in determining the jury's verdict." 507 U.S. 619, 637 (1993). The evidence 5 offered against petitioner at trial on the escape charge was overwhelming, independent of 6 the booking sheet statement - indeed, even independent of all five of the disputed Owen's 7 statements. Dana Mulvani testified from his personal knowledge to a complete description 8 of petitioner's escape plan, as the plan was hatched in Mulvani's presence and even at his 9 (allegedly joking) suggestion. RT at 1382:3-27. He personally witnessed Owen hand his 10 identity wristband to petitioner. Rt at 385:4-15. Moreover, petitioner's fingerprints were 11 identified as those on Owen's release documentation. RT at 1521:10 - 1523:3; Trial Exhibit 12 No. 47, lodged July 28, 2003, as "Identification Report." Petitioner offered no legitimate 13 explanation for these fingerprints, nor was any such explanation remotely apparent from the 14 prosecution's case in chief. Finally, as pointed out by respondent, "[p]etitioner was missing 15 from the jail the next morning and Owen was still there." Answer at 50:15-16. Under such 16 circumstances, petitioner would have likely been convicted absent the admission of Owen's 17 statements, and thus any violation of petitioner's Confrontation Clause stemming therefrom 18 did not have a "substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's 19 verdict." Brecht, 507 U.S. at 637. Therefore, petitioner is not entitled to habeas relief on 20 his Sixth Amendment claim.

21 As discussed above, petitioner also contends that admission of the "booking sheet 22 statement" violated his right to due process because the statement did not fall within any 23 exception to the hearsay rule, including California's declaration against interest exception.
24 Even if this were the case, and a due process violation occurred, in order to obtain habeas 25 relief on the of such an evidentiary error, petitioner must show prejudice under Brecht.
26 Dillard v. Roe, 244 F.3d 758, 767, n.7 (9th Cir. 2001) (quoting Brecht, 507 U.S. at 623).
27 As explained above, petitioner has not established that admission of Owen's statement 28 about the booking sheet had a substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining

1 the jury's verdict. Therefore, petitioner cannot establish that he is entitled to habeas relief 2 on his due process claim.

3 12. Sentencing Claim

4 Petitioner contends that his sentence violates his right to due process because the 5 trial court did not prove beyond a reasonable doubt that his prior convictions qualified as 6 “strikes” under California’s “three strikes” law. Amend Pet. at 3-4. Specifically, petitioner 7 argues that his two prior convictions, in 1993 and 1995, did not qualify as strikes because 8 he was only sentenced to probation and not to a term in prison. Id. at 3-4, Brief attached to 9 Petition at 4-6.

10 The federal right to due process does require, however, that every element of a 11 sentence enhancement be proven beyond a reasonable doubt. See Garcia v. Carey, 395 F.3d 12 1099, 1102 (9th Cir. 2005). Here, the record reflects ample evidence that petitioner has 13 four prior serious felony strike convictions under California law. Based on certified records 14 of petitioner’s prior convictions and the testimony of a fingerprint expert, the trial court 15 found that petitioner had suffered the following four prior convictions: 1993 convictions for 16 attempted robbery (Cal. Penal Code §§ 211, 664) and two counts of felony assault with 17 personal use of a deadly weapon (Cal. Penal Code §§ 245(a)(!), 1192.7(c)(23)), and a 1995 18 conviction for robbery (Cal. Penal Codes § 211). RT at 2583-91; CT at 1032-1044-45. The 19 trial court found that all four of these convictions qualified as strikes under California’s 20 three strikes law (Cal. Penal Code §§ 667(b)-(i) and 1170.12)). RT at 2593-94; CT 1109.
21 Furthermore, at petitioner’s entry of plea in 1993, he admitted that the attempted robbery 22 and two counts of assault with a deadly weapon constituted “serious” felony convictions 23 under California Penal Code § 1192.7(c), which necessarily qualifies them as strikes. CT at 24 1032, 1044-45; see Cal. Pen. Code §§ 1192.7(c), 667, 1170.12.<sup>25</sup> When petitioner later

26 27 <sup>25</sup>Petitioner claims that he plead to his prior convictions as “nonserious felonies during 28 a plea bargain.” Brief attached to Amend. Pet. at 7-10. He does not provide any evidence in support of this allegation, which in any event is contradicted by the record of petitioner’s plea hearings, as cited above, at which he admitted they qualified as strikes.

1 pled guilty to robbery in 1995, he again admitted that the foregoing previous convictions 2 (from 1993) constituted “strike” convictions. CT at 1093-95, 1097-99.

3 The fact that petitioner received probation did not preclude them from qualifying as 4 strikes under California law. To begin with, respondent argues, correctly, that the question 5 of whether petitioner’s prior convictions qualify as “strikes” under California’s three strikes 6 law is a question of state law. This court is bound by the California Supreme Court’s 7 rejection of petitioner’s claim to the extent it amounts to a ruling that petitioner’s prior 8 convictions qualify as strikes as a matter of state law. See Bradshaw v. Richey, 546 U.S.
9 74, 76 (2005). In any event, petitioner’s prior convictions did in fact qualify as strikes 10 under California law. Petitioner indicates, correctly, that assault with a deadly weapon is a 11 “wobbler” offense, i.e. it can be either a felony or a misdemeanor, and that it is considered 12 to be a misdemeanor if the defendant receives “summary probation” at the time of 13 sentencing. See Cal. Pen. Code § 17(b). In this case, however, petitioner was placed on 14 felony probation, not summary probation, on his two assault with a deadly weapon 15 convictions. CT. at 1033. As a result, the convictions were felonies, not misdemeanors, 16 that qualified as serious “strike” felonies under California law. See People v. Balderas, 41 17 Cal.3d 144, 203 (1985); Cal. Pen. Code § 1192.7(c)(23). Furthermore, petitioner’s two 18 other prior convictions, for robbery and attempted robbery, are not “wobblers,” but are 19 strictly felony convictions. See Cal. Pen. Code § 213. Petitioner cites no authority, nor is 20 this court aware of any, providing that petitioner’s receiving probation for his robbery and 21 attempted robbery convictions preclude them from qualifying as strikes.

22 In sum, there was sufficient evidence upon which the trial could find beyond a 23 reasonable doubt that petitioner’s prior convictions qualified as “strikes” under California 24 law. Accordingly, petitioner is not entitled to habeas relief on this claim.

25 CONCLUSION

26 In light of the foregoing, the petition for a writ of habeas corpus is DENIED as to 27 petitioner’s convictions for theft by false pretenses of Nicholas Brayevich, attempting to 28 dissuade Nicholas Brayevich from testifying, and credit card forgery with respect to Wilbur

1 Johnson, and escape from a county jail. Rule 11(a) of the Rules Governing Section 2254
2 Cases now requires a district court to rule on whether a petitioner is entitled to a certificate 3 of appealability in the same order in which the petition is denied. Petitioner has failed to 4 make a substantial showing that his claims amounted to a denial of his constitutional rights 5 or demonstrate that a reasonable jurist would find the denial of his claim debatable or 6 wrong. Slack v. McDaniel, 529 U.S. 473, 484 (2000). Consequently, no certificate of 25 <sup>26</sup>The court notes Petitioner cannot be retried for this conviction. In Burks v. United 26 States, 437 U.S. 1 (1978), the United States Supreme Court held that double jeopardy bars 27 retrial when a conviction is reversed because the evidence presented at the first trial was 28 legally insufficient. This is because the government has had a fair opportunity but failed to develop a case that warranted submission to a jury. See Burks, 437 U.S. at 11; see, e.g., Jones

v. Wood, 207 F.3d 557, 563-64 (9th Cir. 2000) (in habeas case, addressing sufficiency of evidence to determine whether retrial after granting writ was permissible).
