IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA
SAN JOSE DIVISION

JAMES FREDDIE CAVITT, Petitioner,
v.
VINCE CULLEN, Warden,<sup>1</sup>
Respondent.

Case Number C 05-3064 JF
ORDER<sup>2</sup> DENYING PETITION FOR WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS

I. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

On October 29, 1997, a San Mateo Superior Court jury convicted Petitioner James Freddie Cavitt (“Cavitt”) of first degree murder (Cal. Pen. Code § 187)<sup>3</sup>; first degree robbery (§§ 211, 212.5(a)); first degree burglary (§§ 489, 460(a)); conspiracy (§ 182(a)(1)); and grand theft of

1 a firearm (§ 487). In addition, the jury sustained findings that the murder had been committed 2 under the special circumstances of robbery and burglary (§ 190.2(a)(17)(i) and (ii)) and that 3 Cavitt personally inflicted great bodily injury during the commission of the murder, robbery, and 4 burglary (§§ 1203.075(a)(1), (a)(2), (a)(5); § 12022.7). On January 15, 2002, the trial court 5 sentenced Cavitt to an indeterminate term of twenty-five years to life. The judgment was 6 affirmed by the California Court of Appeal in an unpublished opinion filed February 5, 2002.
7 Cavitt then sought review by the California Supreme Court, which granted review and affirmed 8 the convictions in an opinion issued July 21, 2004. People v. Cavitt, 33 Cal. 4th 187 (Cal. 2004).

10 Cavitt filed the instant federal petition on July 28, 2005, asserting the following grounds 11 for relief: (1) “the trial court violated his Fifth, Sixth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights to due 12 process and trial by jury by excluding crucial exonerating evidence”; (2) the trial court violated 13 his Fifth, Sixth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights to due process and trial by jury “by giving 14 erroneous instructions on the connection between homicide and the underlying felony which 15 must be proved before a burglar or robber may be convicted of felony murder for a homicide 16 committed by a confederate”; and (3) “the California Supreme Court compounded the violations 17 of those rights by rendering the elements of California’s felony murder rule unconstitutionally 18 vague.” (Habeas Pet. 4.)

19 On March 28, 2007, the Court granted Respondent’s motion to dismiss the petition for 20 failure to exhaust state remedies as to the third ground for relief and stayed the action pending 21 further action by the California Supreme Court. (See Dkt. No. 7.) Following the state supreme 22 court’s denial of relief, this Court reopened the case and reissued its previous order to show 23 cause. (See Dkt. No. 13.) The Court heard oral argument on June 25, 2010.

24 II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

25 The following facts are taken from the California Supreme Court’s published opinion 26 affirming the convictions of Cavitt and his co-defendant Robert Williams:

1 Defendant James Cavitt started dating Mianta McKnight in January 1995.
2 Mianta's father, Philip, and her stepmother, Betty, disapproved of the relationship.
3 Concerned about Mianta's late-night dating and her high school truancy, Philip 4 insisted that Mianta move from Oakland, where she had been living with Philip's 5 niece, back to Brisbane to live with him and Betty. He hoped this would keep her 6 away from Cavitt.

7 After moving back to Brisbane in November 1995, Mianta became upset 8 that Philip and Betty did not allow her to go on dates with Cavitt. Her 9 relationship with Betty in particular had been rocky for some time, and she often 10 told her schoolmates that she hated Betty.

11 Around the end of November 1995, 17-year-old Mianta, 17-year-old 12 Cavitt, and Cavitt's friend, 16-year-old defendant Robert Williams, developed a 13 plan to burglarize the McKnight house, where Mianta was then living. The plan 14 was to enter the house with Mianta's assistance, tie up Betty, and steal what they 15 could find. The three scheduled the burglary-robbery for December 1. On that 16 afternoon, Mianta purchased rope and packing tape on the way home from school.
17 Later on, she placed a bed sheet outside the house and left the side door unlocked.

18 Around 6:30 p.m., Williams and Cavitt drove together to the McKnight 19 house. They were wearing black clothes, gloves, and hockey masks and were 20 carrying duct tape. Between 7:00 and 7:15 p.m., Mianta met them at the side 21 door, gave them the rope she had just bought, and told them Betty was upstairs in 22 bed. All three went upstairs. Cavitt and Williams threw the sheet over Betty's 23 head. While Cavitt secured the sheet around Betty's head with duct tape, 24 Williams fastened Betty's wrists together with plastic flex cuffs. Then they used 25 the rope to bind her ankles and wrists together with the sheet, creating a kind of 26 hood for Betty's head. During the process, Cavitt and Williams also punched 27 Betty in the back with their fists to get her to be quiet. Betty sustained extensive 28 bruising to her face, shoulders, arms, legs, ankles and wrists, consistent with blunt force trauma.

After Betty was immobilized, Cavitt, Williams, and Mianta ransacked the bedroom, removing cash, cameras, Rolex watches, jewelry, and two handguns.
Before leaving, Cavitt and Williams pretended to bind Mianta and placed her on the bed next to Betty. Cavitt and Williams each claimed that Betty was still breathing, although with difficulty, when they left her, facedown on the bed.

After Mianta freed herself, she turned Betty over onto her back. Mianta claimed she removed duct tape from Betty's mouth. Betty did not move and did not appear to be breathing. Mianta called her father to tell him they had been robbed. She also told him Betty was unconscious. Philip immediately reported the incident to the Brisbane Police Department at 7:44 p.m. When the dispatcher called the McKnight house at 7:45 p.m., Mianta claimed that robbers had entered the house while she was downstairs watching television, had put a sheet over her head, and had knocked her unconscious; that she was eventually able to free herself; that she had called her father to report the crime; and that her stepmother was unconscious.

Brisbane police arrived at 7:52 p.m. Betty was on her back on the bed.
She was not breathing and had no pulse. Her hands were bound behind her, and her wrists and ankles were tied together with a rope. Officers attempted cardiopulmonary resuscitation. Paramedics obtained a heartbeat at 8:11 p.m., but Betty had already suffered severe and irreversible brain injury. She was pronounced dead the next morning. The cause of death was insufficient oxygen, or anoxia, caused by asphyxiation. The injuries she sustained were a contributing cause.

1 During conversations with police and a neighbor, Mianta reiterated her 2 claim that unidentified robbers had somehow entered the house, that they had 3 wrapped her in a sheet and knocked her unconscious, and that she had been unable 4 to untie herself until after the robbers left, at which point she discovered that her 5 stepmother was unconscious. When police secured Philip’s consent to conduct a 6 polygraph of his daughter, however, Mianta eventually confessed to her 7 involvement in the burglary-robbery. Cavitt and Williams were arrested on 8 December 2 and also confessed. While being transported to juvenile hall, Cavitt 9 said to Williams, “Man, we fucked up. We should have just shot her.”

Police found the stolen jewelry, cameras, and handguns at Cavitt’s home, as well as black clothing, gloves, and hockey masks.

Cavitt and Williams, who were tried separately, contended that Mianta must have killed Betty after they had left and for reasons unrelated to the burglary-robbery. To that end, they offered evidence tending to show that Mianta hated her stepmother, that Mianta had expressed to her schoolmates a desire to kill her stepmother, and that Betty could have been suffocated after Cavitt and Williams had returned to Cavitt’s home with the loot.

11 III. LEGAL STANDARD

12 Where, as here, the habeas petition was filed after the effective date of the Anti-Terrorism 13 and Effective Death Penalty Act (“AEDPA”), a petitioner:

14 can prevail on a claim ‘that was adjudicated on the merits in State court’ only if he 15 can show that the adjudication: (1) resulted in a decision that was contrary to, or 16 involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as 17 determined by the Supreme Court of the United States; or (2) resulted in a decision that was based on an unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented in the State court proceeding.

18 Musladin v. Lamarque, 555 F.3d 830, 834 (9th Cir. 2009) (citing 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)).

19 “A state court decision will be ‘contrary to’ federal law if it ‘applies a rule that contradicts 20 the governing law set forth in [Supreme Court] cases’ or ‘confronts a set of facts that are 21 materially indistinguishable from’ a Supreme Court case yet reaches a different result.” Id.
22 (quoting Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 405-06 (2000)). “It will involve an ‘unreasonable 23 application of’ federal law only if it is ‘objectively unreasonable.’” Id. (quoting Williams, 529 24 U.S. at 409). The state court decision tested under these standards is the decision of the highest 25 state court to provide a reasoned decision on the merits. Id. If the state court decision was 26 contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Supreme Court

1 authority, the federal court must resolve the constitutional claim without the deference that the 2 AEDPA otherwise requires. Frantz v. Hazey, 533 F.3d 724, 735 (9th Cir. 2008). However, even 3 if it finds constitutional error by the state court, this Court will grant habeas corpus relief only if 4 it finds that the error “had substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury’s 5 verdict.” Brecht v. Abrahamson, 507 U.S. 619, 637 (1993) (citation omitted).

6 IV. DISCUSSION

7 A. California Supreme Court’s “Logical Nexus” Construction

8 Cal. Pen. Code § 189 defines felony murder as “[a]ll murder . . . which is committed in 9 the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate [enumerated felonies including robbery and 10 burglary].” At trial, Cavitt requested a jury instruction that in order for a non-killer accomplice 11 to be convicted of felony murder, the killer must have committed the homicide “in furtherance 12 of” the underlying felony or felonies. The trial court rejected the proposed instruction.

13 On appeal, the California Supreme Court affirmed the trial court’s rejection of Cavitt’s 14 proposed instruction. At the same time, the court rejected the state’s argument that “it is enough 15 that the act resulting in death occurred at the same time as the burglary and robbery.” Cavitt, 33 16 Cal. 4th at 196. After reviewing California case law, the court held that:

17 California law thus has long required some logical connection between the 18 felony and the act resulting in death, and rightly so. Yet the requisite connection 19 has not depended on proof that the homicidal act furthered or facilitated the 20 underlying felony. Instead, for a nonkiller to be responsible for a homicide committed by a cofelon under the felony-murder rule, there must be a logical nexus, beyond mere coincidence of time and place, between the felony the parties were committing or attempting to commit and the act resulting in death.

21 Id. at 201 (emphasis added). In so holding, the court concluded that a proper application of the 22 complicity aspect of the felony murder rule would “exclude homicidal acts that are completely 23 unrelated to the felony for which the parties have combined, and to require instead a logical 24 nexus between the felony and the homicide beyond a mere coincidence of time or place.” Id.
25 The court held that because “the felony-murder rule does not require proof that the homicidal act 26 furthered or facilitated the felony,” and because the “in furtherance” language “has the potential

1 to sow confusion if used in the instructions to the jury,” the trial court did not err in rejecting 2 Cavitt’s proposed instruction. Id. at 202-03 (citation omitted). Cavitt argues that this holding 3 was contrary to clearly established law both because the “logical nexus” formulation is 4 unconstitutionally vague and because adopting the formulation constituted an unforeseeable
5 enlargement of accomplice liability that was applied retroactively to him. (Pet’r’s Reply 9.)

6 1. Vagueness

7 The void-for-vagueness doctrine requires that “[t]o satisfy due process, ‘a penal statute 8 [must] define the criminal offense [1] with sufficient definiteness that ordinary people can 9 understand what conduct is prohibited and [2] in a manner that does not encourage arbitrary and 10 discriminatory enforcement.’” Skilling v. United States, 130 S.Ct. 2896, 2904 (2010) (citing 11 Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U. S. 352, 357 (1983)). The Supreme Court also has recognized that 12 “deprivation of the right of fair warning can result not only from vague statutory language but 13 also from an unforeseeable and retroactive judicial expansion of narrow and precise statutory 14 language.” Bouie v. City of Columbia, 378 U.S. 347, 352 (1964).

15 Cavitt contends that the “logical nexus” formulation of accomplice liability under the 16 felony murder rule is unconstitutionally vague because the term “has no generally accepted 17 meaning at all” and because the state supreme court failed “to describe the causal connection on 18 which complicity in felony murder depends.” (Pet’r’s Reply 19.) He argues that the court’s 19 failure to define the term “logical nexus” “makes the determination a wholly subjective one for 20 the trier of fact; it allows each juror to answer the question based on whatever he or she thinks 21 ‘logical nexus’ means.” (Id. at 20.) Cavitt also claims that the vagueness of the “logical nexus” 22 formulation, and its retroactive application, deprived him of his due process right to fair notice.
23 Cavitt’s argument requires this Court to accept the premise that “until the state Supreme Court 24 decided Cavitt, the long-established rule was that non-killer burglary accomplices were not guilty 25 of felony murder if the homicide was not committed to facilitate or advance the burglary.” (Id. at 26 21.)

1           “The United States Supreme Court has made clear that ‘it is not the province of a federal 2 habeas court to reexamine state court determinations on state law questions.’” (Resp. Memo. 5 3 (citing Estelle v. McGuire, 502 U.S. 62, 68-69 (1991)). This Court agrees that a federal habeas 4 action is not the proper vehicle for challenging the California Supreme Court’s interpretation of 5 state law. “Our concern is with [the petitioner’s] federal rights.” Langford v. Day, 110 F.3d 6 1390, 1388 (9th Cir. 1996). Even if it were, the Court does not agree that the “logical nexus” 7 requirement renders § 189 unconstitutionally vague. While it did not define the term in detail, 8 the state supreme court explained that the connection between the underlying felony and the act 9 resulting in death must be “more than mere coincidence of time and place,” and that a non-killer 10 accomplice’s liability for felony murder turns on “the existence of objective facts that connect the 11 act resulting in death to the felony the nonkiller committed or attempted to commit.” Cavitt, 33 12 Cal. 4th at 196, 205. Particularly when viewed with the deference required by the AEDPA, this 13 understanding of the complicity aspect of the felony-murder rule is sufficiently unambiguous that 14 both jurors and potential defendants can comprehend its meaning.

15           2.       Retroactive Application

16           “[A]n unforeseeable judicial enlargement of a criminal statute, applied retroactively, 17 operates precisely like an ex post facto law, such as Art. I, s 10, of the Constitution forbids.”
18 Bouie, 378 U.S. at 353. Cavitt argues that “even if the [California Supreme Court’s] [‘logical 19 nexus’] formulation of the [felony murder complicity] rule were not unconstitutionally vague, its 20 application to Cavitt’s case violated due process because ‘an unforeseeable . . . construction of a 21 state law by the courts may not be retroactively applied to a defendant.’” (Pet’r’s Reply 25 (citing 22 Clark v. Brown, 442 F.3d 708, 721 (2006) (citation omitted)).) The merit of this argument thus 23 depends on the accuracy of Cavitt’s assertion that “in 1995, when Betty McKnight was killed, the 24 established construction of the complicity rule held that non-killer accomplices were not guilty of 25 murder unless the fatal act was committed in furtherance of the felony, and the Supreme Court 26 had given no indication it was reconsidering that construction.” (Id.) Respondent contends that

1 the California Supreme Court “did not unforeseeably expand a non-killer’s liability for felony 2 murder pursuant to California Penal Code section 189, it simply rejected petitioner’s asserted 3 limitation on liability.” (Resp. Memo. 10.) In particular, Respondent points to the court’s 4 conclusion that a requirement that the homicide be committed “in furtherance of” a felony was 5 not supported by the statutory text or the legislative history.

6 “The beginning point for a Bouie analysis is the statutory language at issue, its legislative 7 history, and judicial constructions of the statute.” Webster v. Woodford, 369 F.3d 1062, 1069 8 (9th Cir. 2004) (as amended). Cal. Pen. Code § 189 defines felony murder as “[a]ll murder . . .
9 which is committed in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate [enumerated felonies 10 including robbery and burglary].” As with the felony-murder special circumstance statute at 11 issue in Clark, if the state supreme court’s decision at issue here “had been written on a clean 12 slate, it would not constitute a due process violation, or indeed anything close to it.” Clark, 442 13 F.3d 708.

14 Here, of course, the court was not writing on a clean slate. Indeed, the California 15 Supreme Court has considered the issue of vicarious liability under the felony-murder rule on 16 multiple occasions. The court reviewed the history of this aspect of its jurisprudence in People v.
17 Pulido, 15 Cal.4th 713 (Cal. 1997):

18 [W]e have on many occasions discussed the scope of a robber or other 19 felon’s liability for a killing committed by a confederate. As shown below, our 20 descriptions of an accomplice’s liability have limited complicity to killings 21 occurring while the killer was acting in furtherance of a criminal purpose common 22 to himself and the accomplice, or while the killer and accomplice were jointly 23 engaged in the felonious enterprise.

24 . . . .
25 Our earliest statement of the complicity of one robber in a murder 26 committed by another appears to have been in People v. Vasquez (1875) 49 Cal.
27 560 (hereafter Vasquez). A man had been shot to death during the robbery of a 28 store. Vasquez admitted his participation in the robbery, but testified the shot had been fired by another of the robbers, without Vasquez’s approval or assistance.
On appeal from his first degree murder conviction, Vasquez complained of the following jury instruction: “It is no defense to a party associated with others in, and engaged in a robbery, that he did not propose or intend to take life in its perpetration, or that he forbade his associates to kill, or that he disapproved or regretted that any person was thus slain by his associates. If the homicide in question was committed by one of his associates engaged in the robbery, in 1 furtherance of their common purpose to rob, he is as accountable as though his 2 own hand had intentionally given the fatal blow, and is guilty of murder in the 3 first degree.” (Id. at pp. 562-563.) We held the instruction accurately stated the 4 law under section 189, although we declined to elaborate, observing merely that 5 “no argument is required to sustain it, as a clear and correct statement of the law 6 on that point.” (Id. at p. 563; accord, People v. Lawrence (1904) 143 Cal. 148, 7 157 [76 P. 893] [Vasquez instruction correctly states “the rule of absolute 8 responsibility of a party for a homicide committed by his associates in furtherance 9 of their common purpose to rob.”].)

10 In another early case, People v. Olsen (1889) 80 Cal. 122 [22 P. 125] 11 (hereafter Olsen), overruled on other grounds in People v. Green (1956) 47 Cal.2d 12 209, 227, 232 [302 P.2d 307], we approved an instruction that, while similar to 13 the Vasquez instruction, was more general in not being limited to robberies: “If a 14 number of persons conspire together to commit a felony, and take the life of 15 another person in the prosecution of the common design, it is murder in all, 16 although only one may have inflicted the fatal blow, the others being present 17 aiding and abetting.” (80 Cal. at p. 124.) The defendant complained the 18 instruction failed to inform the jury the killing must have been the “ordinary and 19 probable effect” of the felonious scheme, and not a “fresh and independent 20 product” of the killer’s mind. (Id. at p. 125.) Rejecting this argument, we held 21 the instruction, by limiting complicity to a killing committed “in the prosecution 22 of the common design,” adequately excluded killings foreign to the contemplated 23 crime or crimes. (Ibid., italics in original.)

24 In People v. Washington, [62 Cal.2d 777 [(Cal. 1965)] (hereafter 25 Washington), we examined the scope of section 189’s robbery-murder rule with 26 some care, ultimately holding the rule did not apply to a killing committed by 27 someone other than the robber or robbers. (62 Cal.2d at p. 783.) In Washington, 28 we described a robber’s complicity as follows: “A defendant need not do the killing himself, however, to be guilty of murder. He may be vicariously responsible under the rules defining principals and criminal conspiracies. All persons aiding and abetting the commission of a robbery are guilty of first degree murder when one of them kills while acting in furtherance of the common design.” (Id. at pp. 781-782.)

Other post-Vasquez descriptions of complicity in robbery murder under section 189 are worded in a rather different manner. In both People v. Perry (1925) 195 Cal. 623, 637-638 [234 P. 890] (hereafter Perry) and People v.
Martin, [12 Cal.2d [466, at] 472 [(Cal. 1938)] (hereafter Martin), we stated the rule as follows: “[I]f a human being is killed by any one of several persons jointly engaged at the time of such killing in the perpetration of or an attempt to perpetrate the crime of robbery, whether such killing is intentional or unintentional, or accidental, each and all of such persons so jointly engaged in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate such crime of robbery, are guilty of murder of the first degree.” (Accord, People v. Waller (1939) 14 Cal.2d 693, 703 [96 P.2d 344]; People v. Hutchinson (1967) 254 Cal.App.2d 32, 38-39 [61
Cal.Rptr. 868]; People v. Ray (1962) 210 Cal.App.2d 697, 700 [26 Cal.Rptr.
825].) This formulation, unlike the Vasquez instruction, does not require that the killing have been “in furtherance of the common purpose to rob,” although it does require the killer and accomplice be jointly engaged, at the time of the killing, in a robbery.

As this review demonstrates, our formulations of the rule establishing complicity of one robber in another robber’s homicidal act have varied in their precise language and perhaps in the exact scope of complicity intended. One line

1 of cases echoes, verbatim or with relatively minor variation, the Vasquez
2 formulation—the killing must be committed “in furtherance of their common 3 purpose to rob.” (Vasquez, supra, 49 Cal. at p. 563; see Washington, supra, 62 4 Cal.2d at p. 783 [killing “must [have been] committed by the defendant or by his 5 accomplice acting in furtherance of their common design”]; Olsen, supra, 80 Cal.
6 at p. 124 [complicity for killing committed “in the prosecution of the common 7 design.”].) Martin and Perry, on the other hand, appear to state a broader rule of 8 felony-murder complicity, under which the killing need have no particular causal 9 or logical relationship to the common scheme of robbery; accomplice liability 10 attaches, instead, for any killing committed while the accomplice and killer are 11 “jointly engaged” in the robbery. (See also Perry, supra, 195 Cal. at p. 638 12 [robbery, rather than killing, must be “in furtherance of a common purpose”]; 13 People v. Waller, supra, 14 Cal.2d at p. 703 [same].) One lower court has 14 explicitly distinguished the two complicity rules, holding that, regardless of the 15 lack of a causal link between robbery and killing, accomplice liability for felony 16 murder is established, as in Martin and Perry, whenever “the killing is done 17 during the perpetration of a robbery in which they were participating.” (People v.
18 Cabaltero (1939) 31 Cal.App.2d 52, 61 [87 P.2d 364], italics added (hereafter 19 Cabaltero)).

20 Pulido, 15 Cal.4th at 720-22. The Pulido court declined to choose one formulation over the 21 other, holding that “[u]nder neither of the approaches described above . . . does complicity in a 22 felony murder extend to one who joins the felonious enterprise after the killing has been 23 completed.” Id. at 722; see People v. Smithson, 79 Cal. App. 4th 480, 501 (Cal. Ct. App. 2000) 24 (“[B]ecause the Pulido court did not disapprove either line of felony-murder cases, both are still 25 valid and we are duty-bound to comply with the Supreme Court’s directives in each.”).

26 With respect to legislative history, the court has held that:

27 Once a person has embarked upon a course of conduct for one of the enumerated 28 felonious purposes, he comes directly within a clear legislative warning—if a death results from his commission of that felony it will be first degree murder, regardless of the circumstances. (10) This court has reiterated numerous times that “The purpose of the felony-murder rule is to deter felons from killing negligently or accidentally by holding them strictly responsible for killings they commit.” (People v. Washington (1965) 62 Cal.2d 777, 781 [44 Cal.Rptr. 442, 402 P.2d 130].) The Legislature has said in effect that this deterrent purpose outweighs the normal legislative policy of examining the individual state of mind of each person causing an unlawful killing to determine whether the killing was with or without malice, deliberate or accidental, and calibrating our treatment of the person accordingly. Once a person perpetrates or attempts to perpetrate one of the enumerated felonies, then in the judgment of the Legislature, he is no longer entitled to such fine judicial calibration, but will be deemed guilty of first degree murder for any homicide committed in the course thereof.

People v. Burton, 6 Cal. 3d 375, 388-89 (Cal. 1971), superseded on other grounds by

Case No. C 05-3064 JF

ORDER DENYING PETITION FOR WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS

(JFLC3)

1 constitutional amendment as stated in People v. Brazille, No. E026946, 2001 WL 1423739 (Cal.
2 Ct. App. 2001).

3 In its decision in the instant case, the court acknowledged the formulations described in 4 Pulido, but rejected both sides' arguments with respect to the implication of its earlier decisions:

5 We therefore reject the assumption—shared by both parties—that the “in 6 furtherance” (e.g., Vasquez, supra, 49 Cal. at p. 563) and “jointly engaged” (e.g., 7 People v. Martin, supra, 12 Cal.2d at p. 472, 85 P.2d 880) formulations articulate 8 opposing standards of felony-murder liability. The latter does not mean—as the 9 Attorney General suggests—that mere coincidence of time and place between the 10 felony and the homicide is sufficient. And the former does not require—as defendants suggest—that the killer intend the homicidal act to aid or promote the felony. Rather, Vasquez and Martin have merely used different words to convey the same concept: to exclude homicidal acts that are completely unrelated to the felony for which the parties have combined, and to require instead a logical nexus between the felony and the homicide beyond a mere coincidence of time or place.

11 Cavitt, 33 Cal. 4th at 201. The court also cited the above passage from Burton, holding that 12 “[t]he purpose of the felony-murder rule is to deter those who commit the enumerated felonies 13 from killing by holding them strictly responsible for any killing committed by a cofelon, whether 14 intentional, negligent, or accidental, during the perpetration of the felony.” Id. at 197.

15 The criminal conduct upon which Cavitt's conviction is based occurred in 1995. At the 16 time, both the Vasquez and Martin/Perry formulations of accomplice liability under the felony-17 murder rule were valid. See Pulido, 15 Cal.4th at 720-22 (explaining the state of the law on the 18 issue in 1997 with no indication of change between 1995 and 1997); People v. Smithson, 79 Cal.
19 App. 4th at 501. Accordingly, the court's construction of § 189 in Cavitt's case, which attempted 20 to reconcile the two seemingly opposing formulations, was not “unexpected and indefensible by 21 reference to the law which had been expressed prior to the conduct in issue,” as prohibited by the 22 United States Supreme Court in Bouie. Bouie, 378 U.S. at 354; compare Bouie, 378 U.S. at 356
23 (granting habeas petition where “[t]he interpretation given the statute by the South Carolina 24 Supreme Court in the Mitchell case, . . . so clearly at variance with the statutory language, has not 25 the slightest support in prior South Carolina decisions”), with Moore v. Rowland, 367 F.3d 1199, 26 1200 (9th Cir. 2004) (per curiam) (holding that retroactive application of a state supreme court's

1 decision did not violate due process where lower appellate courts were divided on the relevant 2 issue at the time of the criminal conduct and the court merely “selected among two existing lines 3 of authority”). Nor did the construction ““make an action done before the passing of the law, and 4 which was innocent when done, criminal; and punish such action,’ or ‘[ ]aggravate a crime, or 5 make it greater than it was, when committed.”” Id. at 353 (citation omitted).

6 B. Trial Court’s Felony-Murder Instructions

7 “[T]he Due Process Clause protects the accused against conviction except upon proof 8 beyond a reasonable doubt of every fact necessary to constitute the crime with which he is 9 charged.” In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 364 (1970). As he did on direct appeal, Cavitt contends 10 that the jury instructions failed to apprise the jury of the requirements for complicity under the 11 felony-murder rule. Specifically, Cavitt contends that “the jury instructions in this case said that 12 felony murder complicity required nothing more than a temporal connection between the felony 13 and the homicide.” (Pet’r’s Reply 33.)

14 The three instructions relevant to this issue are the following:

15 1. The unlawful killing of a human being, whether intentional, unintentional or 16 accidental, which occurs during the commission or as a direct causal result of 17 robbery or burglary, is murder of the first degree when the perpetrator had the 18 specific intent to commit that crime. The specific intent to commit robbery or 19 burglary and the commission of such crime must be proved beyond a reasonable 20 doubt. CALJIC 8.21.

21 2. A killing is committed in the commission of a felony if the killing and the 22 felony are part of one continuous transaction. There is no requirement that the 23 homicide occur while committing or while engaged in the felony or that the 24 killing be part of a felony other than that the two acts be part of one continuous 25 transaction. People’s Special Instruction #2.

26 3. If a human being is killed by one of several persons engaged in the commission 27 of the crimes of robbery or burglary, all persons who either directly and actively 28 commit the act constituting that crime or who, with knowledge of the unlawful purpose of the perpetrator of the crime and with the intent or purpose of committing, encouraging or facilitating the commission of the offense, aid, promote, encourage or instigate by act or advice its commission, are guilty of murder in the first degree, whether the killing is intentional, unintentional, or accidental. CALJIC 8.27.

In rejecting Cavitt’s direct appeal with respect to the sufficiency of the instructions,

1 Justice Baxter, writing for the majority, explained:

2 The instructions adequately apprised the jury of the need for a logical nexus 3 between the felonies and the homicide in this case. To convict, the jury 4 necessarily found that “the killing occurred during the commission or attempted 5 commission of robbery or burglary” by “one of several persons engaged in the 6 commission ” of those crimes.” [sic] The first of these described a temporal 7 connection between the crimes; the second described the logical nexus. A burglar 8 who happens to spy a lifelong enemy through the window of the house and fires a 9 fatal shot . . . may have committed a killing while the robbery and burglary were 10 taking place but cannot be said to have been “engaged in the commission” of 11 those crimes at the time the shot was fired.

12 Cavitt, 33 Cal. 4th at 203. In a concurrence joined by Justice Kennard, Justice Werdegar wrote 13 that in her view the term “engaged in the commission” “is calculated only to inform the jury of 14 the necessary temporal connection between the predicate felony and the murder, not of the 15 necessary causal or logical connection.” Id. at 211. However, Justice Werdegar explained that 16 the failure to give a clearer instruction was harmless in Cavitt’s case because “there was no 17 substantial evidence to support the theory that Mrs. McKnight’s killing was logically or causally 18 unrelated to the conspirators’ commission of burglary and robbery, in which defendants Cavitt 19 and Williams were full participants.” Id. at 212.

20 Notwithstanding the fact that they concurred in the judgment affirming his conviction, 21 Cavitt urges this Court to adopt the reasoning of Justices Werdegar and Kennard as a basis for 22 concluding that his rights to due process and trial by jury were violated. He also argues that the 23 California Supreme Court “invaded the province of the jury” by choosing not to let a jury decide 24 whether a “logical nexus” between the felony and the killing existed. (Pet’r’s Reply 35.)
25 Respondent argues that even if the instructions were ambiguous as to the “logical nexus” 26 requirement, the ambiguity could not have had a substantial or injurious effect sufficient to 27 entitle Petitioner to relief under Brecht. Respondent cites the following passage from the state 28 supreme court’s opinion:

This is not a situation in which Mianta just happened to have shot and killed her lifelong enemy, whom she coincidentally spied through the window of the house during the burglary-robbery. [citation omitted] Betty, the murder victim, was the intended target of the burglary-robbery. As part of those felonies, Betty was 1 covered in a sheet, beaten, hog-tied with rope and tape, and left facedown on the 2 bed. Her breathing was labored at the time defendants left. These acts either 3 asphyxiated Betty in themselves or left her unable to resist Mianta’s murderous 4 impulses. Thus, on this record, one could not say that the homicide was completely unrelated, other than the mere coincidence of time and place, to the burglary-robbery. [footnote omitted]

5 Cavitt, 33 Cal. 4th at 204.

6 This Court need not determine whether the trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury if 7 it concludes that such error was harmless under Brecht. To obtain relief based on an 8 instructional error, a habeas petitioner must “show that the alleged instructional error had 9 substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury’s verdict.” Clark, 450 F.3d at 10 905 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). “A ‘substantial and injurious effect’ means 11 a ‘reasonable probability’ that the jury would have arrived at a different verdict had the 12 instruction been given.” Byrd v. Lewis, 566 F.3d 855, 860 (9th Cir. 2009) (citing Clark, 450 F.3d 13 at 916). “To decide whether [Cavitt] was prejudiced, we consider: (1) the weight of evidence 14 that contradicts the defense; and (2) whether the defense could have completely absolved the 15 defendant of the charge.” Id. (citation omitted).

16 Here, as all of the justices of the California Supreme Court agreed, there was substantial 17 evidence in the record that the burglary-robbery and the killing were logically connected “beyond 18 a mere coincidence of time or place.” See Cavitt, 33 Cal. 4th 187, 204 (“[T]he evidence here did 19 not raise an issue as to the existence of a logical nexus between the burglary-robbery and the 20 homicide . . . .”); id. at 212 (Werdegar, J., concurring) (“[T]here was no substantial evidence to 21 support the theory that Mrs. McKnight’s killing was logically or causally unrelated to the 22 conspirators’ commission of burglary and robbery, in which defendants Cavitt and Williams 23 were full participants.” (citing id. at 204)). Cavitt’s only evidence to the contrary is that Mianta 24 hated Betty and killed her because of her personal animus toward her. Even conceding this was 25 true and that Mianta’s true intention always had been to kill Betty following her co-conspirators’ 26 departure, the Court cannot conclude that there is a reasonable probability that the jury would

1 have acquitted Cavitt of first degree murder if it had received a clearer instruction with respect to 2 the “logical nexus” requirement. As the state supreme court explained:

3           One would hardly be surprised to discover that targets of inherently 4 dangerous felonies are selected precisely because one or more of the participants 5 in the felony harbors a personal animus towards the victim. But it would be novel 6 indeed if that commonplace fact could be used to exculpate the parties to a 7 felonious enterprise of a murder committed in the perpetration of that felony, 8 where a logical nexus between the felony and the murder exists. . . . Defendants’ 9 focus on the killer's subjective motivation thus is not merely contrary to the 10 felony-murder rule but would in practice swallow it up.

11 Cavitt, 33 Cal. 4th at 205 (emphasis in original).

12 C. Trial Court’s Exclusion of Evidence of Mianta’s Hatred of Her Stepmother

13 Four of Mianta’s classmates testified at trial that Mianta had told them that she hated her 14 stepmother and wanted to kill her. Over Cavitt’s objection, the trial court ruled that the 15 classmates’ testimony was admissible only with respect to the robbery-murder and burglary-16 murder special circumstances and not with respect to the felony murder charge. As he did on 17 direct appeal, Cavitt claims that the trial court’s limiting instruction violated his Fifth, Sixth, and 18 Fourteenth Amendment Rights.

19 The California Supreme Court held that even if the limiting instruction were erroneous, 20 the error was harmless:

21           Evidence that Mianta wanted to kill Betty, even if credited, would not 22 have affected the undisputed logical nexus between the burglary-robbery and the 23 homicide. That connection was based on the fact that the crimes involved the 24 same victim, occurred at the same time and place, and were each facilitated by 25 binding and gagging Betty. Evidence that Betty was intentionally murdered by 26 Mianta because of a private grudge, instead of killed accidentally or killed 27 intentionally to facilitate the burglary-robbery, would not have undermined that 28 connection. Hence, the exclusion of this evidence from the jury's consideration, even if error, could not have been prejudicial.

On the other hand, evidence that Mianta had a private motive was relevant to the jury’s determination that the homicide and the burglary-robbery were part of a single continuous transaction. Nonetheless, it is not reasonably probable that the result would have been different had the testimony of Mianta’s schoolmates been admitted without the limiting instruction. As stated, the jury was permitted to use this testimony in considering the robbery-murder and burglary-murder special circumstances. In order to find the special circumstances true, the jury necessarily found that the murder was committed “during the commission of or in order to carry out or advance the commission of the crimes of robbery or burglary or to 1 facilitate the escape therefrom or to avoid detection.” Accordingly, the jury, 2 despite this testimony, found either that the homicide was committed “during the 3 commission” of the burglary-robbery or that it was designed to facilitate those 4 crimes or the escape therefrom. Either finding demonstrates that the homicide 5 was part of a continuous transaction with the burglary-robbery. Moreover, despite 6 the admission of this same testimony for all purposes, [Cavitt’s co-Defendant] 7 Williams’s jury convicted him of felony murder.

8 The likelihood of prejudice was further diminished by the fact the jury did 9 hear from other witnesses that Mianta’s relationship with Betty was poor, that she 10 was angry with Betty, and (from Cavitt himself) that Mianta wanted to kill Betty.
11 None of this testimony was subject to the limiting instruction concerning the 12 testimony of Mianta’s schoolmates. In sum, Cavitt cannot show prejudice.

13 Cavitt, 33 Cal. 4th at 209-10.

14 Cavitt contends that the limiting instruction was highly prejudicial because the evidence 15 tended to prove that Mianta killed her stepmother not to “further” the commission of the robbery 16 or burglary but because of personal animus. He also argues that “[e]ven if the court had 17 instructed in the terms of the 2004 ‘logical nexus’ formulation . . . it is still reasonably probable 18 the jury would have concluded that Betty’s death could be considered a ‘fresh and independent’ 19 act by Mianta which was ‘logically’ disconnected from the joint felonies.” (Pet’r Reply 33 20 (footnote omitted) (emphasis in original).) The former argument is dependent upon a 21 determination that the state supreme court’s rejection of the “in furtherance” requirement was 22 erroneous, which it was not. The state supreme court explicitly rejected the latter argument, 23 holding that “the felony-murder rule renders it unnecessary to examine the individual state of 24 mind of each person causing an unlawful killing – which is precisely what the ‘fresh and 25 independent product’ limitation would require courts to do.” Cavitt, 33 Cal. 4th at 205 n.6.

26 Cavitt points out correctly that “the state must provide [the court] with a ‘fair assurance’ 27 that the error was harmless under Brecht.” (Pet’r’s Reply 38 (citation omitted).) For reasons 28 similar to those discussed above in Section IV.B., the Court concludes that Respondent has done so, particularly in light of the state supreme court’s detailed analysis. Given the other evidence that was admitted without limitation, the jury’s findings with respect to the special circumstances, and the verdict in Williams’ case (in which use of the classmates’ testimony was not limited), the Court concludes that even assuming arguendo that the limiting instruction was 1 given in error, such error was harmless under Brecht and does not warrant habeas corpus relief.

2 V. ORDER

3 Good cause therefor appearing, the petition for writ of habeas corpus is DENIED. The 4 Clerk shall enter judgment and close the file.
