REAL NAME™

The best way to describe facebook is myspace with less features and interactivity. Though fun for the first month or so, you soon run out of things to do and adding new friends seems difficult. The site author does not put enough effort into encouraging finding new people through the site. Nor is there much motivation for a user to keep using the site after graduating college. My opinion, stick with myspace ;)

This is in my opinion the best site on the internet. Every other friend site will clutter the page with a bunch of crap you don't need. This is simple easy and doesn't have a bunch of confusing features. It's the simplicity that makes it so addictive.

REAL NAME™

This site is a complete rip-off of ConnectU. I can't believe that they haven't been shut down yet. The guy was actually working for ConnectU and stole the source code. Don't use this site!

REAL NAME™

Register with your university email address and the collegiate population is yours for browsing. Pictures and personal data for seemingly everyone at your school, plus access to the same information for students at other schools - what more could you ask of a site with the name thefacebook.com?

Ask your peers to "be your friend," and, if they accept, they join your network. The site even offers to show you a visualization of your network - a map of your friendships.

Unfortunately, as with all social networking sites, the same gizmo that allows them to rise in popularity so rapidly can just as quickly lead them to irrelevancy.

Thefacebook.com is battling that with a steady stream of new features.
