1 I. INTRODUCTION

2 Oracle’s motion asks the Court to review a small set of documents that illustrate two broad 3 problems with Defendants’ document production and clawback process. The first category 4 involves documents that simply are not privileged. The second involves documents for which, if 5 privileged at all, Defendants have waived that privilege by “selecting” favorable examples to 6 produce while shielding harmful examples based on privilege.

7 Defendants respond in three ways. First, through an elaborate set of conclusory 8 declarations and related argument, they retroactively characterize the documents in ways 9 contradicted by the documents’ plain language. For example, documents that on their face 10 described “business communications” now get re-labeled as “legal advice.” That effort fails 11 because the AC privilege does not protect business information, whether communicated to an 12 attorney or not, and regardless of any label placed on it after the fact. Upon examination, the 13 documents in category one do not support Defendants’ description of them and are not privileged.

14 Second, Defendants rely on their “careful parsing” of documents similar to each other. But, 15 again upon examination, Defendants’ attempted parsing is unjustified and unsupportable. Their 16 “parsing” in fact supports Oracle’s contention that Defendants have taken a large group of similar 17 documents on interrelated subjects, produced some of them and withheld others without any 18 reasonable supporting rationale. Indeed, Defendants’ “parsing” suggests that they made privilege 19 claims based more upon the damaging character of the underlying content, not whether it really 20 contained legal advice. For example, Defendants offer no convincing distinction between legal 21 and business advice in their assertion that a business analysis by the SAP Board of Directors 22 became legal advice by virtue of being forwarded by an attorney.

23 Third, Defendants answer arguments Oracle did not make and contradict testimony offered 24 by their own witnesses. Oracle does not argue express waiver relating to the Rules of Engagement, 25 though much of Defendants’ brief and responsive evidence seems to address that issue. Instead, 26 Oracle contended that Defendants’ inconsistent approach amounted to selective and implicit 27 waiver. Defendants’ opposition brief illustrates the inconsistent approach relating to the Rules of 28 Engagement subject matter. Defendants downplay the use of those documents as a “sword” by

1 denying that they created the Rules of Engagement to limit SAP’s liability (despite an SAP
2 30(b)(6) witness’ admission that was precisely the purpose of the Rules). On the other hand, 3 Defendants admit that they intended the Rules to prevent illicit sharing of Oracle’s intellectual 4 property. Either way, the Rules’ purpose, creation, interpretation, and application directly relate to 5 Oracle’s claims. Defendants have put them at issue by asserting them as a sword to contradict 6 Oracle’s claims of intentional infringement. It is not fair to permit Defendants to allow some 7 discovery of the Rules, selected by them, and disallow the remainder.

8 Finally, Oracle disagrees strongly with Defendants’ claim that Oracle made improper use of 9 the clawed back documents. Oracle agrees that the issue requires clarification. However, that 10 issue is distinct from the substance of Oracle’s motion. Oracle disagrees with Defendants’ 11 apparent argument that the disagreement over how disputed documents get used in a motion to 12 compel provides any ground to deny Oracle’s motion.

13 II. DEFENDANTS HAVE MISAPPLIED THE AC PRIVILEGE TO 14 CLEARLY NON-PRIVILEGED DOCUMENTS

15 The documents illustrative of category one speak for themselves. Defendants’ numerous 16 declarations and lengthy, circular explanations cannot change the underlying content or imbue 17 these documents with a privilege that did not apply at the time of their creation.

18 Indeed, Defendants’ own legal framework confirms the non-privileged nature of these 19 documents. The first and third “essential elements” of the attorney-client privilege require 20 “communications relating to” the purpose of seeking legal advice. In re Fischel, 557 F.2d 209, 21 211 (9th Cir. 1977); Opp. at 3. In other words, the “motive for the communication” is an 22 “important consideration.” U.S. Postal Service v. Phelps Dodge Refining Corp., 852 F. Supp. 156, 23 160 (E.D.N.Y. 1994). When that purpose, or motive, is primarily to seek business advice, the 24 communication is not privileged. See id.; North Pacifica, LLC v. City of Pacifica, 274 F. Supp. 2d 25 1118, 1127 (N.D. Cal. 2003) (“[L]egal advice is implicated ‘if the nonlegal aspects of the 26 consultation are integral to the legal assistance given and the legal assistance is the primary 27 purpose of the consultation.” (emphasis in original)); see also Kintera, Inc. v. Convio, Inc., 219 28 F.R.D. 503, 515 (S.D. Cal. 2003) (stating that distinction between “legal versus business advice” is

1 found when information communicated “between corporate counsel and company personnel” is 2 “relayed for the purpose of obtaining legal advice” (emphasis in original)).

3 Defendants offer no meaningful analysis as to why the contents of the documents at issue
4 constitute legal, and not business, advice. Instead, they make conclusory and unsupported 5 statements, while declaring that they have carefully parsed their documents. Contrary to these 6 assertions, the clawed back materials in category one appear to have one common denominator – 7 the assertion of privilege to protect the most damaging aspect of a particular document. None is a 8 communication made for the purpose of seeking legal advice. Others appear to convey non-9 privileged information.

10 Taking the documents in order, while Defendants describe document #1 (Howard Dec., Ex.
11 B) as containing “a request [for] certain business information” by one TomorrowNow non-attorney 12 employee to another, containing “summaries of information” collected by a non-attorney, and as a 13 “proposed agenda for a call,” and “notes from portions of the legal advice” he received (Opp. at 5), 14 they then summarily declare that the notes and other content in this document related to “legal 15 advice” sought or obtained from an attorney. Id.

16 That circular reasoning fails. Defendants may not withhold communications as privileged 17 simply by claiming that they relate to legal advice when the face of the document indicates 18 otherwise. Communications involving an attorney merely passing along information are not 19 privileged. See North Pacifica, 274 F. Supp. 2d at 1129 & n.5 (when an attorney merely passes 20 information along, it is not a confidential communication); see also U.S. Postal, 852 F. Supp. at 21 160 (“[T]he mere fact that a communication is made directly to an attorney . . . does not mean that 22 the communication is necessarily privileged.”). Oracle believes that the Court’s in-camera review 23 will reveal that on its face this document did not contain legal advice, but rather summarized non-24 legal information being passed along by an attorney, and therefore conclude that the privilege 25 claims should fail.

26 Defendants’ description of document #2 (Howard Dec., Ex. C) also fails. Defendants assert 27 that the redacted portion of document #2 contains a “summary of [] legal risks,” Opp. at 6, whereas 28 the document itself, just above the redaction, clearly states that “

1 [REDACTED]” Howard Dec., Ex. C (at 2 TN-OR00164404). The mere involvement of [REDACTED] in a business group’s creation of 3 a risk assessment does not make the assessment privileged. See North Pacifica, 274 F. Supp. 2d at 4 1127 (mere presence of attorneys does not create privilege). Moreover, Defendants again simply 5 assert that this document reflects lawyers’ assessment of legal risks, while the document indicates 6 the opposite. For example, the statement that “more detailed results” could be “made available 7 under ‘Attorney Client Privilege’” demonstrates that the redacted portion of the document is not a 8 matter of privilege since it is separate from the “more detailed results” that could be made 9 available under “Attorney Client Privilege.” The footnote about the outstanding technical risk 10 assessment has no bearing on whether the redacted risk assessment summary is legal or not.
11 Compare Opp. at 6 (describing the footnote as business advice) with Geng Dec. at 2:24-27
12 (describing the footnote as a reference to some technical risk assessment) and Howard Dec., Ex. C 13 (the document itself).¹

14 Defendants characterize document #4 as an email string that stemmed from “a request for 15 legal advice” regarding the “integration of sales forces.” Again, the AC privilege only attaches if 16 “legal assistance is the primary purpose of the consultation.” See North Pacifica, 274 F. Supp. 2d 17 at 1127. Defendants cannot have it both ways. They cannot characterize this document as “legal 18 advice” but not the many other similar documents they have produced (which do not appear to 19 contain the same type of damaging information). See, e.g., Howard Dec., Ex. O (at 399:11-19, 20 non-privileged testimony concerning same topic) and Ex. X (non-privileged email concerning 21 [REDACTED]). The Court should not endorse Defendants’ self-serving application of the privilege.
22 See Section III, below.

23 III. DEFENDANTS HAVE SELECTIVELY AND IMPLICITLY WAIVED
24 THE PRIVILEGE REGARDING THE RULES OF ENGAGEMENT

25 Defendants have both misunderstood and misconstrued the selective waiver argument.

26 _____
27 ¹ Document #3 is not addressed in this reply due to Defendants having withdrawn it at the last 28 minute prior to Oracle filing its motion. See Mot. to Compel at 3 & n.2.

1 They have misunderstood it by responding to a perceived express waiver argument that Oracle did 2 not make. The issue is not, as Defendants seem to argue, whether they have expressly asserted the 3 advice of counsel defense (at least with respect to this narrow issue of the Rules of Engagement).
4 See Opp. at 8-9. Rather, the issue is whether Defendants can orchestrate a litigation defense 5 strategy – including in court and out of court statements – that revolves around admitted legal 6 advice to mitigate SAP’s liability through the Rules of Engagement, but shield that advice when it 7 suits them. They cannot have it both ways, and the mounting inconsistencies surrounding the 8 Rules of Engagement fully illustrate the problem.

9 To begin, Defendants are wrong when they assert they do not use the Rules of Engagement 10 as a “sword.” See Opp. at 9. They have repeatedly defended their use of Oracle’s copyrighted
11 software by reference to the Rules, citing the Rules as some kind of protection of Oracle’s
12 intellectual property and a basis to limit SAP’s liability. See, e.g., Howard Dec., Exs. N-P 13 (deposition excerpts); Answer at ¶ 2 (referencing the “steps” Defendants have allegedly taken “to 14 assure that TN’s business is conducted properly”). Yet they invoke the AC Privilege to limit 15 Oracle’s discovery of the Rules to only that evidence Defendants wish Oracle to have. Under the 16 law and under common sense principles of fairness, by touting the Rules of Engagement as a basis 17 to limit liability, Defendants have placed at issue those Rules and must allow full discovery of 18 them in order “to give [their] opponent a fair opportunity to defend against it.” See Bittaker v.
19 Woodford, 331 F. 3d 715, 720 (9th Cir. 2003).

20 Defendants’ argument is grounded in contradictory and revealing statements about the 21 Rules of Engagement. For example, Defendants argue that the Rules of Engagement “were 22 adopted by SAP’s Executive Board and implemented by TN’s and SAP’s business executives 23 based on the business decision to create a figurative ‘firewall’ between SAP and TN in an effort to 24 prevent the physical passing from TN to SAP of any Oracle intellectual property.” Opp. at 2.
25 That, among other things, is a direct concession of using the Rules of Engagement as a sword. Yet 26 Defendants ignore their own position in asserting there is no sword. They ultimately deny – 27 contrary to their prior statement and their own witness’ testimony (Howard Dec., Ex. P at 279:8-28 280:24) – that the firewall’s purpose was to prevent the passing of liability. Opp. at 9. Because

1 Defendants use the Rules of Engagement to defend their conduct, they must allow discovery of it.
2 See Bittaker, 331 F. 3d at 720.

3 Moreover, Defendants compound the unfairness to Oracle by selectively waiving the 4 privilege relating to the Rules of Engagement. For example, Document #4 illustrates selective 5 waiver due to Defendants' insistence that it contains privileged legal advice, whereas other 6 communications about the same topic do not. See, e.g., Howard Dec. Ex. O (at 399:11-19, 7 testimony about attorney's instruction on integration pursuant to Rules of Engagement) and Ex. X 8 (email discussing [REDACTED] issue, copying attorneys).

9 These false distinctions illustrate why Defendants' selective assertion of the privilege as to 10 the Rules of Engagement cannot stand. If Defendants intended the firewall to prevent the passing 11 of IP, they also intended it to prevent the passing of legal liability (as they elsewhere admit). If the 12 Rules were a business decision, then interpretations of how the Rules apply do not suddenly 13 become legal analysis. Defendants struggle to draw a sensible distinction between these issues in 14 practice. They assert that "the clawed back documents look in many ways like non-privileged 15 documents except they contain attorney client communications." Opp. at 17. That statement fails 16 to explain why Defendants' assertions of privilege over some documents but not others is not an 17 indefensible strategic use of the privilege.

18 Documents #5 and #6 illustrate this implicit waiver. Defendants have shielded certain 19 documents on grounds of AC privilege,² but they use the same subject matter as a sword by 20 repeatedly asserting their behavior was legally permissible. They support that assertion by 21 referring to the Rules of Engagement, which they claim to have set up as a firewall in order to 22 protect Oracle's intellectual property. See Mot. to Compel at 10. SAP's 30(b)(6) testimony, 23

24 ² Defendants argue that Document #5, which concerns an amendment to the Rules of Engagement 25 (a business policy) is privileged because it was sent to Chris Faye, a lawyer, and therefore has as 26 its "purpose" the seeking of legal advice. Opp. at 18. This circular reasoning contradicts the rule 27 that "communications transacting the general business of the company do not attain privileged 28 status solely because in-house ... counsel is 'copied in'." See Kintera, 219 F.R.D. at 515.
Defendants' logic would obliterate the business communications carve-out from AC Privilege jurisprudence, because it appears sweepingly to classify all communications with in-house counsel as requests for "legal" advice.

1 through Arlen Shenkman, illustrates this “sword” approach. Shenkman volunteered testimony
2 (over no objection by defense counsel) that revealed the content of an SAP attorney’s instructions
3 to SAP employees regarding the Rules of Engagement for the admitted purpose of shielding 4 liability. See Howard Dec., Ex. O (at 397:17-399:19).

5 That testimony differs from the “manufactured sword” issue cited by Defendants in PostX
6 Corporation v. Secure Data In Motion, Inc., No. C-02-04483SI, 2004 WL 2663518 (Nov. 20, 2004 7 N.D. Cal.). There, the plaintiff asserted simply that its claims had a legal basis and were made in 8 good faith (id. at *15), and that they relied on the advice of counsel in filing the action (id. at *16).
9 Here, Defendants have volunteered certain information about their attorneys’ involvement in 10 creating and interpreting of the Rules of Engagement. See, e.g., Howard Dec., Ex. O. They have 11 placed the attorneys’ involvement with and interpretation of the Rules of Engagement at issue by 12 arguing that the Rules, a business policy, were adopted in order to create a firewall and prevent 13 illegal sharing of intellectual property. See, e.g., Opp. at 2. If Defendants’ attorneys were 14 integrally involved in creating, interpreting, and applying the Rules of Engagement, and the Rules 15 could only be fully understood by Defendants themselves via input from their lawyers (see Howard 16 Dec., Ex. O), then Plaintiffs would be at a real disadvantage by having access to only a selected 17 portion of the attorney-related evidence.

18 Finally, Defendant’s “promise” to limit use of evidence regarding the Rules of 19 Engagement³ is not a viable or fair alternative. In the first place, as explained above, Defendants 20 have already done what they now promise not to do. See, e.g., Howard Dec., Ex. O (at 399:13-19; 21 testimony of Mr. Shenkman that he was instructed by an attorney to wait for receipt of the Rules of 22 Engagement before making a business assessment). Indeed, even if they had not already 23 selectively waived the privilege, it is hard to imagine how they could fail to do so in the future 24 while still referencing the Rules at all, given their assertions that lawyers were involved at every

26 _____
27 ³ Defendants promised that they “will not use as a defense in this case the fact or substance of their 28 lawyers’ contemporaneous legal analysis or legal advice relating to the creation, content, and interpretation of the ROE.” Opp. at 14.

1 step. Opp. at 14. More importantly, it would continue to allow them to have it both ways – to 2 protect against discovery of some of their lawyers’ involvement in the creation, strategy and 3 implementation of the Rules, while simultaneously maintaining that the Rules protect their 4 conduct.

5 In sum, Defendants walk an impossibly fine line in arguing that they have not asserted the 6 Rules of Engagement “firewall” affirmatively, since they have done just that since the beginning of 7 the case. Under the law, Defendants cannot shield Oracle’s full discovery of the facts behind their 8 creation. See Bittaker, 331 F. 3d at 720.

9 IV. ORACLE’S USE OF THE CONTESTED DOCUMENTS WAS PROPER

10 In preparing this motion, Oracle relied on the stipulated Protective Order (the parties “shall 11 not use such information for any purpose other than in connection with a motion to compel”) 12 (emphasis supplied), the Court’s May 29, 2008 Order (Plaintiffs “may refer to the document in the 13 context of a motion to compel”) and associated hearing transcript (allowing Oracle to “refer to the 14 contents” of a document in making its motion to compel), and the Court’s colloquy with the parties 15 during the July 24, 2008 discovery conference (during which the Court expressed that it was 16 unclear who should submit the contested documents as exhibits, and suggesting the parties attempt 17 to resolve the issue between themselves).⁴

18 Each of these support Oracle’s understanding, that in preparing a motion to compel, it 19 could “refer” to the documents at issue. Oracle read the words “refer to” by a common definition, 20 and one it believed reasonable under the circumstances: “to read something in order to get 21 information.” See Cambridge Dictionaries Online, <http://dictionary.cambridge.org> (defining “refer 22 to”). If “refer to” were given only its narrowest meaning, allowing Oracle solely to mention the 23 existence of the documents in writing a motion to compel about them, the motion would lack any 24 meaningful substance.

25 _____
26 ⁴ In advance of filing its motion, in recognition that the parties had not reached agreement over the 27 extent to which Oracle could “refer to” the documents, Oracle invited Defendants’ preference over 28 whether Oracle or Defendants would submit the contested documents to the Court. See Mot. to Compel at 2 & n.1.
