1 I. INTRODUCTION

2 Acacia opposes Defendants’ motion for summary judgment on the grounds that the issue
3 presented by Defendants’ motion is already squarely before the Court in Acacia’s pending Motion
4 for Entry of Judgment of Non-Infringement and Invalidity for Indefiniteness of the ‘702 patent and 5 Certification Pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P., Rule 54(b). The Court has stated that it would not rule on 6 Acacia’s motion until after all of the claim terms at issue in the Yurt family of patents have been 7 construed by the Court. Claim construction should be complete by the fall of this year.

8 Thus, the Court should postpone ruling on defendants’ motion until after the Court has 9 completed its claim constructions and at the same time that the Court rules on Acacia’s request for 10 certification pursuant to Rule 54(b).

11 II. THE COURT SHOULD WAIT UNTIL AFTER ALL OF THE CLAIM TERMS IN 12 THE YURT FAMILY OF PATENTS ARE CONSTRUED BEFORE IT DECIDES
13 WHETHER TO GRANT SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON THE ‘702 PATENT

14 Acacia’s motion for summary judgment, like defendants’ motion now, seeks entry of a final 15 judgment that all of the claims of Acacia’s ‘702 patent are: (1) invalid, due to the Court’s finding 16 that the claim terms “sequence encoder” and “identification encoder” are indefinite, and (2) not 17 infringed, due to the Court’s construction of the phrase “transmission system at a first location” 18 limits all of the claims to transmission systems which are located at one particular location. The 19 only significant difference between Acacia’s motion and defendants’ present motion is that Acacia
20 also asks that the Court certify the judgment pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P., Rule 54(b), so that Acacia 21 can immediately appeal the judgment.

22 Defendants’ present motion is redundant of their opposition to Acacia’s motion for summary
23 judgment. In their opposition to Acacia’s motion, defendants asked the Court to enter essentially the 24 same judgment that they seek by this motion. Defendants even filed their own proposed order 25 seeking summary judgment. Defendants’ opposition to Acacia’s motion was therefore, in effect, a 26 cross-motion for summary judgment, seeking the same judgment that defendants seek now.

27 At oral argument on February 24, 2006, the Court had the opportunity to enter summary
28 judgment of invalidity and non-infringement of all claims of the ‘702 patent, but the Court chose not

1 to do so. Instead, the Court stated that, because it had not completed construing claim terms from 2 other patents in the Yurt family of patents (including the parent '992 patent) and because the parties'
3 argument and contentions on other terms may persuade the Court to change its prior constructions
4 on the '702 patent, the '702 patent would remain "on the screen." The Court therefore took Acacia's
5 motion under submission until after the Court had completed claim construction on the remaining 6 terms from the asserted Yurt patents:

7 I have given you rulings. I'm happy that you find them to be final 8 enough that you're willing to stipulate to a judgment and move the '702 off 9 the screen, but as far as I'm concerned, it remains on the screen until I have gone through at least, at least an examination of, of the parent patent.

10 '992 is the parent patent. '702 is a divisional patent and the 11 continuation patents I know don't all apply to, to the same defendants here 12 but they all derive from a common specification and so until I, until I have a better opportunity to look at this, my inclination at this point is to not certify it for immediate appeal.

13 That is not to say that I won't, I won't do so prior to sending cases 14 back to the transferor courts. I just want to have the benefit of, of further 15 consideration of, of some of the claims because what happens is that some of 16 the system claims and the method claims as you are arguing to me in this, in 17 this system configuration, construction, I should, I should define the system 18 by, by looking at the method.

19 Well, I'm sure I am going to have to look at the method and look at 20 the system at some point that argument may be made to me. So rather than 21 let go now, I think I'll -- my tentative decision is to hold on to everything.

22 (February 24, 2006 Transcript, at 35:12-37:11).

23 The Court's decision to wait for claim construction to be completed before entering any 24 judgment on the '702 patent is eminently practical. For example, at the February 24, 2006 hearing,
25 the Court stated that it would not stay the cases involving the New York defendants¹, whose cases 26 had just been transferred by the MDL Panel to this Court. Accordingly, the Court gave the New 27 York defendants the opportunity to address any claim terms from the '992 patent that the Court has 28 already construed. The New York defendants have since indicated that they intend to address nearly every one of the Court's prior constructions of terms in the '992 patent claims, including the term

1 “transmission system,” which is part of the ‘702 patent claim phrase “transmission system at a first
2 location.” The fact that the Court will still be considering the construction of the term “transmission
3 system” was one of the Court’s concerns and one of the reasons why the Court did not grant 4 summary judgment on the ‘702 patent on February 24. (See, February 24, 2006 Transcript, at 5 16:15-22:5).

6 III. THERE IS NO LEGITIMATE REASON WHY THE COURT MUST DECIDE
7 SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON THE ‘702 PATENT AT THIS TIME

8 There is no urgency to defendants’ motion and there is no possibility of any prejudice to 9 defendants if the summary judgment issue is not decided until after the Court has completed claim
10 construction. At this time, the parties are preparing their briefing on the additional claim
11 construction issues for the other patents in the Yurt family, including terms from the ‘992 patent 12 which the Court has already construed. The Court will hear argument on June 9 and August 11, 13 2006 on all of the remaining claim terms that are at issue. There is no more litigation activity
14 involving the ‘702 patent at this time, as the parties are not asking the Court to construe any 15 additional claim terms from the ‘702 patent. Thus, it should be irrelevant to defendants whether 16 summary judgment on the ‘702 patent is entered on June 2, 2006, or after August 11, 2006, when 17 the Court is expected to complete its construction of the remaining claim terms.

18 Acacia will, however, be prejudiced if the Court grants defendants’ motion for summary
19 judgment on June 2, 2006. Pursuant to Acacia’s pending motion for summary judgment on the ‘702
20 patent, Acacia is agreeable to summary judgment on the ‘702 patent, but only if the judgment is 21 certified for immediate appeal pursuant to Rule 54(b). The Court, however, has stated that it will 22 not decide summary judgment or Acacia’s request for Rule 54(b) certification until after the claim
23 construction on the Yurt family of patents is completed this summer. Therefore, if the Court grants
24 defendants’ motion on June 2, 2006, it will likely do so without making a final decision on Acacia’s
25 request for Rule 54(b) certification. Thus, by filing their motion and seeking a decision on June 2, 26 2006, before the Court can complete claim construction, defendants are attempting to circumvent
27 Acacia’s motion and force the Court to enter judgment on the ‘702 patent before the Court is able to 28 consider Acacia’s request for Rule 54(b) certification. This would be contrary to the Court’s
