1 I. INTRODUCTION

2 It is indisputable that, as a result of the Court’s claim construction rulings, all of the asserted
3 claims in the patents-in-suit are indefinite and, therefore, invalid. As a result, there is and cannot be 4 a case or controversy relating to infringement of these claims, because it is legally impossible to 5 infringe an invalid claim.

6 Acacia filed the Motion For Summary Judgment For Invalidity (“Acacia’s Motion”) against 7 itself, not as a ploy as defendants suggest, but as one last attempt to avoid an impermissible advisory 8 opinion, and the concomitant waste of resources associated with the response to and consideration of 9 defendants’ summary judgment motions which are cumulatively more than 80 pages in length 10 (without attachments). The issues presented in the Motion were not “hand picked” by Acacia as 11 defendants repeatedly assert, but are the direct consequence of, and defined by, the Court’s 12 determination that certain claim terms were indefinite.

13 The Court should not continue the October 20, 2008 hearing date now set for Acacia’s 14 Motion. If granted, the ruling on the Motion is in the interest of judicial economy and will save the 15 parties great time and expense associated with defendants’ pending motions, which benefits will be 16 lost if the Motion decided at the same time that defendants’ motions are considered.

17 II. BACKGROUND FACTS

18 From July 12, 2004 through February 13, 2008, the Court has issued a series of six Claim
19 Construction Orders, construing nearly every claim term that the parties to this MDL proceeding 20 have requested that the Court construe, while at the same time, staying all discovery in the case. As 21 a result of these six Claim Construction Orders, all of the remaining claims asserted by Acacia are 22 invalid as being indefinite: (1) the Court held that the terms “sequence encoder” and “identification 23 encoder” are indefinite (2nd CCO, at 18); (2) the Court construed the term “transmission system” to 24 include an “identification encoder” (6th CCO, at 9, 11); and (3) the Court construed the term “central 25 processing location” to require a “transmission system.” (4th CCO, at 6).

26 Each remaining asserted claim contains one or more of these terms, and therefore, pursuant 27 to the Court’s Claim Construction Orders, each asserted claim is indefinite and therefore invalid.
28 Acacia has stipulated to the indefiniteness of each asserted claim based on the Court’s Claim

1 Construction Orders.<sup>1</sup> The invalidity of each asserted claim is a fact that is not disputed by any 2 defendant.

3 On May 27, 2008, the Court issued its Order adopting the parties' briefing schedule for the 4 defendants' Section 112 motions (the Court having directed the parties to agree on a schedule at the 5 May 9 Case Management Conference) (Doc. No. 282). The intent of this schedule was to provide a 6 time by which Acacia would identify all Section 112 issues raised by defendants to which it could 7 stipulate so as to reduce the number of disputed issues and thereby reduce the number of Section 8 112 motions which defendants would be required to bring. Thus, consistent with this intent, the 9 Court's scheduling Order required Acacia to notify defendants of any motions to which it would 10 stipulate and required defendants to file dispositive motions on only the disputed issues by July 11.
11 (Doc. No. 282, at 1:21-23). As Acacia had already stipulated that all of the asserted claims were 12 invalid as being indefinite based on the Court's Claim Construction Orders, these issues were not 13 "disputed." Accordingly, on June 17, 2008 (shortly after the Court had entered all of the covenant 14 not sue stipulations filed by Acacia), Acacia filed the Motion. (Doc. No. 287). Acacia's Motion
15 seeks entry of judgment in favor of defendants on Acacia's patent infringement claims and in favor 16 of defendants on defendants' invalidity counterclaims. (Doc. No. 287). Nothing in the Court's 17 Orders prohibited Acacia from seeking such relief.

18 By Court Order dated June 18, 2008, the Court reset the Motion for hearing on October 20,

20 III. ARGUMENT

21 A. Defendants Agree That Acacia Is Entitled To The Relief It Seeks In The Motion
22 And Therefore Defendants Have No Substantive Ground On Which To Oppose
23 Acacia's Motion

24 One reason defendants are requesting a continuance of Acacia's Motion is that defendants

25 <sup>1</sup> Acacia expressly reserved all rights on appeal and stated that its stipulation and Motion shall not 26 serve as a waiver of any right that Acacia may have to object to or appeal from any of the above-
27 mentioned rulings or any other finding or ruling set forth in the Court's 1st CCO, 2nd CCO, 3rd
28 CCO, 4th CCO, 5th CCO, or 6th CCO that is not the subject of the stipulation or Motion.

<sup>2</sup> When it filed the Motion, Acacia set the hearing for July 7, 2008. The Court, however, sua sponte issued an Order resetting the hearing date to October 20, 2008. (Doc. No. 290).

1 have no substantive grounds on which to oppose it. All defendants agree that all of the asserted
2 claims are invalid as being indefinite based on the Court’s Claim Construction Orders. As discussed
3 in Acacia’s Motion, defendants sought the same relief with respect to claims 1-42 of the ‘702 patent 4 in their own summary judgment motion and, as part of the motion process, defendants proposed 5 bringing dispositive motions on the indefiniteness of all of the asserted claims. Acacia stated it
6 would not oppose defendants proposed motion and, in fact, Acacia stipulated to such indefiniteness 7 of the claims. Even in his letter of September 15, Mr. Benyacar stated that “as set forth in 8 defendants’ pending motions<sup>3</sup>, the Yurt patents are invalid for many reasons in addition to those 9 relied on in Acacia’s motion.” (Exhibit 1 to Silbert Decl.)

10 Thus, defendants fear that, if Acacia’s motion is heard on October 20, then on September 29 11 (the opposition due date), defendants will have to file an opposition to Acacia’s Motion in which 12 they must agree with Acacia that the asserted claims are invalid as being indefinite, making it likely 13 that the Court will grant Acacia the relief it seeks on October 20.

14 B. The Fact That All Of The Asserted Claims Are Invalid As Being Indefinite 15 Means That The Court No Longer Has Any Jurisdiction To Consider Any 16 Other Grounds Of Invalidity

17 In their motion, defendants a number of times accuse Acacia of “hand-selecting” and 18 “strategically selecting” the grounds for invalidity of the asserted claims. Acacia has not “hand 19 selected” or “strategically selected” anything; the Court’s Claim Construction Orders have 20 invalidated every claim as being indefinite. Having found that all of the claims are invalid as being 21 indefinite, the Court no longer has any jurisdiction to consider any other grounds of invalidity, as the 22 Court would be improperly issuing an advisory opinion as to the validity of claims already held to 23 be invalid. Neither Acacia, nor defendants, can contend that any other ground of invalidity exists, as 24 the Court has not found that any claim is invalid for any other reason.

25 The Federal Circuit, on July 15, 2008 (after the Case Management Conference and Acacia

26 <sup>3</sup> In their Section 112 motions, defendants included sections seeking rulings from the Court that all 27 of the asserted claims are invalid as being indefinite for the exact same reasons as those set forth in 28 Acacia’s Motion. Defendants’ inclusion of these invalidity issues is a clear attempt to circumvent both Acacia’s Motion and the Court’s Scheduling Order. The Court’s Order is clear – defendants are only to bring motions “on the disputed issues identified in the Defendants’ letters.” (Doc. No.

1 had filed its Motion), again made clear in Jang v. Boston Scientific Corp., 532 F.3d 1330, 1336
2 (Fed. Cir. 2008) that it will not render any advisory opinions. In Jang, it was unclear to the Federal 3 Circuit which of the district court’s claim constructions would actually affect the issue of 4 infringement on appeal. Thus, rather than risk issuing an advisory opinion as to the construction of 5 any claim term having no bearing on the infringement issues, the court remanded the case for 6 clarification of the stipulated judgment. Jang, 532 F.3d at 1336.

7 Defendants complain that, if Acacia’s Motion were granted, and if Acacia were permitted to 8 appeal only the invalidity of the asserted claims based on the Court’s indefiniteness rulings, then 9 there would be a waste of judicial resources. But, as the Jang case emphasizes, whether a court has 10 jurisdiction to adjudicate a matter takes precedence over inefficiencies and judicial resources. In 11 Jang, the claim construction issue was before the court, but, rather than even risk issuing an 12 advisory opinion, the court decided to remand to the district court for clarification.

13 In any event, there is more risk associated with defendants’ proposal that judicial resources
14 will be wasted. For example, if the appellate court agrees with Acacia that any further proceedings 15 would constitute an advisory opinion, all of the work associated with the resolution of defendants 16 lengthy and complicated motions will be lost. All that will be accomplished is the parties and the 17 Court will be required to deal with a multitude of complicated issues which will be moot in the end.
18 The asserted claims are already legally dead, killing them again achieves nothing.

19 C. Defendants Would Not Be Prejudiced If The Court Were To Grant Acacia’s
20 Motion On October 20, 2008

21 There is absolutely no prejudice to defendants with proceeding on Acacia’s Motion as 22 currently scheduled. If granted, the case is over at the trial court. The matter would then be 23 appealed. If defendants prevail, the case is over completely. If Acacia prevails on appeal, the 24 reasoning and description of the patented invention and the specification’s teachings provided by the 25 Federal Circuit in connection with its ruling would potentially render moot the additional invalidity
26 arguments asserted by defendants in this proceeding. Even if they were not mooted in their entirety, 27 any remaining invalidity issues would be significantly narrowed and proscribed.

1           D. Further Consideration By This Court Of Additional Invalidity Arguments Will 2           Be A Burden In This Court And A Colossal Waste Of Time

3           The additional invalidity issues that are the subject of defendants' new motion are all fact 4 intensive, focusing on what one of ordinary skill in the art would have understood from the patent,
5 whether the patent specification is sufficiently complete to enable a skilled artisan to make and use 6 the claimed invention, and whether or not undue experimentation would be required to practice the 7 claimed invention. Hybritech, Inc. v. Monoclonal Antibodies, Inc., 802 F.2d 1367 (Fed. Cir. 1986).
8 For each issue Acacia will demonstrate through expert testimony that each asserted claim meets the 9 definiteness, enablement, and written description requirements. The most that defendants will 10 demonstrate is the existence of a material fact dispute which, of course, will preclude the entry of 11 summary judgment on these new and completely necessary invalidity issues. If we proceed, we are 12 all about the spend an enormous amount of time and energy for nothing.

13           Compounding the problem is the resignation of the Court's technical advisor, Rainer Schulz.
14 Acacia cannot afford the delay occasioned by the process of his replacement and the subsequent 15 review of fact intensive, unnecessary additional invalidity motions. Patents are a wasting resource.
16 The patents in suit here will expire in less than three years—June 7, 2011. We have been in the 17 claim construction, pre-discovery stage of this case for nearly six years—since November 8, 2002
18 when the first case was filed. It is simply not fair to Acacia for this case to remain at the trial level 19 when all the asserted claims have been adjudged invalid based on indefiniteness.

20           IV. CONCLUSION

21           For the foregoing reasons, the Court should deny defendants' request to continue the hearing 22 date on Acacia's Motion for Summary Judgment.
