Re: TechCrunch, Inc. et al. v. Fusion Garage PTE Ltd., No. 09-5812

Dear Caleb:

We write in response to your letter dated July 27, 2011. We also refer to Matthew Scherb's January 1, 2011 letter and David Bloch's July 7, 2011 letter.

TechCrunch and AOL have refused to produce relevant communications between the parties' transactional attorneys before the merger. For example, AOL Supplemental Privilege Log numbers 9.3, 9.4, 60, 60.1, 60.2, 60.2, 60.3, and 60.4 reflect withheld email exchanges between AOL and TechCrunch transactional lawyers, described as: "Communication[s] reflecting request for and receipt of legal advice of counsel re AOL/TechCrunch acquisition."

The Hewlett-Packard case cited in your July 27 letter fails to shield these documents from production. Under Nidec Corp. v. Victor Co. of Japan, 249 F.R.D. 575, 578 (N.D. Cal., 2007), the joint defense privilege does not apply to communications between merging entities unless: "(1) the communication is made by separate parties in the course of a matter of common [legal] interest; (2) the communication is designed to further that effort; and (3) the privilege has not been waived." See also In re JP Morgan Chase & Co. Securities Litigation, 2007 WL 2363311 (N.D. Ill. 2007). Communications between TechCrunch's and AOL's transactional attorneys about the merger—including communications conveying due diligence information regarding this litigation—plainly do not meet this standard, and must be produced. Such communications were "designed to further not a joint defense in this litigation, but to further a commercial transaction in which the parties, if anything, have opposing interests." Nidec Corp., 249 F.R.D. at 580.

Additionally, your statement that myriad challenged documents “reflect communications between non-lawyers seeking or providing information for the purposes of obtaining legal advice, or else relaying legal guidance” is not persuasive. Entries 28.2 and 28.3 from the AOL Privilege Log appear to have been produced at AOL000049-50 and are simply addresses, meeting requests and reminders, and information about TechCrunch page views in August. Please produce all withheld documents that do not reflect attorney-client privileged communications.

Finally, we do not agree that the merger agreement is irrelevant to TechCrunch’s action against Fusion Garage. The value of the merger necessarily reflects TechCrunch’s expected share of profits from the alleged joint venture. To the extent you contend otherwise, the merger is an admission of TechCrunch’s lack of damages. Similarly, the merger agreement is relevant to show the scope of the alleged joint venture to the extent: (a) the agreement enumerates the alleged joint venture as a TechCrunch asset, or fails to do so; or (b) the alleged joint venture is otherwise classified or described, whether directly or indirectly. The scope of the joint venture is particularly relevant considering that TechCrunch has threatened to seek a share of Fusion Garage’s profits of products unrelated to the JooJoo.

Please let us know your availability on Monday or Tuesday next week to meet and confer over the phone about these issues.

Very truly yours,

/s/ Sam Stake
