EXHIBIT F

Joojoo Tablet: These Court Docs Show Only 90 Preorders (With 15 returned)

7	2. On February 11, 2010, Plaintiffs served a subpoena on PayPal, requesting records
8	concerning PayPal accounts held in the name of Chandrasekar Rathakrishnan and Fusion Garage.
9	According to the records Plaintiffs received from PayPal, Defendant Fusion Garage PTE Ltd. has
10	received about 90 pre-orders for the JooJoo. Approximately 15 of these pre-orders already have
11	been charged back or refunded. Based on these records, it appears that the pre-order monies go to an
12	account in the name of Fusion Garage's CEO, Chandrasekar Rathakrishnan, rather than in the name
13	of Fusion Garage, the company. Exhibit A is a true and correct copy of portions of these PayPal
14	records summarizing the JooJoo payment account. We have redacted phone and account numbers in
15	the interests of protecting Mr. Chandrasekar's privacy. The records showing chargebacks are
16	lengthy and include information sufficient to identify individual buyers, so we have not attached
17	them to this declaration.

These Paypal documents from the JooJoo/Techcrunch lawsuit show that only 90 preorders for the $500 device, roughly $44k worth, were made. This is what happens when you launch a tablet the same month as Apple, at the same price.

And 15 of those turned into cancellations (which were hard to do, we hear.) That doesn't seem like it's enough money to cover legal fees or kick production into high gear. I'm going to reiterate our stance: It seems like a great device, but you should wait for things to shake out before putting down more money. And remember, this costs as much as an iPad.

Send an email to the author of this post at blam@gizmodo.com.