Doctor charged with sex offense, possession of pot

Published on August 26, 2008

By Sarah Fortney
News-Post Staff

Frederick police officers charged an 83-year-old urologist with a fourth-degree sexual offense and possession of marijuana after he allegedly made sexual advances toward a woman.

Robert D. Crouch Sr. told the woman "everyone needs sex" because "it's just like breathing," according to charging documents filed in Frederick County District Court.

Crouch's office is at 900 Toll House Ave. He did not return calls for comment Monday night.

A person who answered the telephone at his office said Crouch was with patients and could not come to the phone.

Police were called to a home on Evergreen Avenue about 6 p.m. Sunday for a reported sexual assault, according to the Frederick Police Department.

A 43-year-old woman reported Crouch, from whom she had been renting a room, began making sexual advances toward her immediately after she moved in earlier this month, according to court documents.

She told officers the advances occurred almost every day, the court documents state.

The woman said Crouch inappropriately grabbed her several times before leaving the house that night, the documents state.

She gave police a description of his car. Officers found and stopped Crouch on Seventh Street near Magnolia Avenue close to Frederick Memorial Hospital, the documents state.

Additional officers went to the house to speak with the woman.

The woman, a student at Hood College, told police that Crouch had sexually assaulted her several times, the documents state. However, she did not report the earlier incidents, when he demanded sexual favors, because she worried about becoming homeless.

Instead of paying cash for rent, Crouch told the woman she could clean the house and take care of his pets, the documents state.

The woman reported that, earlier this month, she was studying when Crouch put a pornographic video into a DVD player. She insisted he turn it off, but he responded by grabbing himself and said, "I'm a doctor, I know what you need."

The woman also told police Crouch had previously offered her marijuana, the documents state. She reported that she believed he might have some in his car.

During the traffic stop, Crouch gave officers permission to search his car. Under the driver's seat, police found a large bag containing about five grams of marijuana.

Crouch was arrested and charged with fourth-degree sexual assault, second-degree assault and possession of marijuana, police said.

Officers took Crouch to Central Booking, where he appeared before a district court commissioner and was released on a written promise to appear in court.
