Allergic Conjunctivitis

The conjunctiva is a thin membrane that covers the visible white part of the eyeball and the underside of the eyelids. This membrane protects and lubricates the eye. The membrane has small blood vessels running through it that can normally be seen. When the conjunctiva becomes inflamed, the condition is called conjunctivitis. In response to the inflammation, the conjunctival blood vessels become swollen. The swelling results in redness in the normally white part of the eye.

The blood vessels of this membrane also react when a person has allergies and is then called allergic conjunctivitis. This condition usually lasts for as long as the allergy persists. Allergic conjunctivitis cannot be passed to another person (non-contagious). The likelihood of bacterial infection is great and the cause is not likely due to allergies if the inflamed eye has:

- A sticky discharge.
- Discharge or sticking together of the lids in the morning.
- Scaling or flaking of the eyelids where the eyelashes come out.
- Red swollen eyelids.

CAUSES

- Germs (bacteria).
- Viruses.
- Irritants such as foreign bodies.
- Blunt injury.
- Chemicals.
- General allergic reactions.
- Inflammation or serious diseases in the inside or the outside of the eye or the orbit (the bony cavity in which the eye sits) can cause a "red eye."

SYMPTOMS

- Eye redness.
- Tearing.
- Itchy eyes.
- Burning feeling in the eyes.
- Clear drainage from the eye.
- Allergic reaction due to pollens or ragweed sensitivity. Seasonal allergic conjunctivitis is frequent in the spring when pollens are in the air and in the fall.

DIAGNOSIS

This condition, in its many forms, is usually diagnosed based on the history and an ophthalmological exam. It usually involves both eyes. If your eyes react at the same time every year, allergies may be the cause. While

You have been diagnosed with allergic conjunctivitis.

Conjunctivitis is an inflammation of the conjunctiva (the thin coverings of the white part of the eye and the insides of the eyelids). It is caused by many different things, including viruses and bacteria, allergies, and even by chemicals or particles of "junk" that irritate the eye. Viruses are the most common cause.

Symptoms of conjunctivitis include pink eye, redness, drainage, foreign body sensation, and lid swelling. You may also notice matting or sticking of your eyelids in the morning.

Conjunctivitis can be highly contagious (it can be easily spread to others). You SHOULD NOT share hygienic items (towels, make-up, tissues), or clothing items. Be sure to wash your hands several times a day and avoid touching your eyes.

Treatment of bacterial conjunctivitis includes warm compresses and topical ophthalmic antibiotics. Medications are generally used for 5-7 days.

You SHOULD NOT wear contact lenses while you have conjunctivitis. Wait for 48 hours after the infection has completely cleared up before using them again.

There is no specific follow-up required, unless you develop any of the problems listed below, or fail to improve as expected. It is always a good idea to get rechecked by your eye doctor if possible.

YOU SHOULD SEEK MEDICAL ATTENTION IMMEDIATELY, EITHER HERE OR AT THE NEAREST EMERGENCY DEPARTMENT, IF ANY OF THE FOLLOWING OCCURS:

- Increasing eye pain.
- Vision problems.
- Photophobia (light bothering your eyes).
- Failure to improve over several days, or worsening symptoms at any time.
