

EXHIBIT 19

PUBLIC VERSION*Apple's Motion to Strike Portions of Samsung's Expert Reports

On April 13, 2012, Apple filed a motion to strike portions of Samsung's expert reports that reference prior art not disclosed in the notice of prior art. (Motion Docket No. 796-028) On April 25, 2012, Samsung filed an opposition.

I have herein denied Samsung's motion to amend its Notice of Prior Art. Therefore, Samsung is precluded from relying on those references it sought to add via its motion to establish invalidity of the asserted claims of the asserted patents in this investigation. Thus, with regard to invalidity, references to those prior art references and arguments based on those references are hereby stricken from Samsung's expert reports. Samsung is free, however, to rely on those prior art references for purposes other than invalidity (i.e., non-infringement) and need not strike in their expert reports references thereto that pertain to issues other than validity.

To the extent that Apple also sought to strike prior art references beyond that which was at issue in Samsung's motion to amend its Notice of Prior Art, Apple's papers are not clear on that point. Thus, I am hereby GRANTING Apple's motion to strike as indicated above, but DENYING any additional relief sought by Apple. If Apple did in fact seek to have additional prior art references struck from Samsung's expert reports, Apple may raise those issues as a motions in limine.

Order

Apple's motion to strike is hereby GRANTED-IN-PART and DENIED-IN-PART as indicated above.
