Re: Apple v. Samsung, No. 11-cv-1846 (ND Cal)

Dear Mia:

As we previously informed Apple, Samsung's design expert Samuel Lucente has a pending patent application in Europe for the same graphic user interface invention that he created in the 1990's. The counterpart United States patent issued in 2003, as disclosed in his curriculum vitae. The European application was filed over ten years ago in January of 2002. The last substantive action by Mr. Lucente was nearly 20 months ago in the form of a June 2010 response to an EPO office action. On February 1, 2012, Mr. Lucente requested a decision on the file and indicated that he would put forward no additional arguments in the application proceedings. Given the EPO's last office action in December 2009, and its more recent December 2011 request for hearing, it is highly likely that the patent application will be rejected without any additional argument.

Samsung believes this should more than satisfy any legitimate concerns Apple may have that Mr. Lucente will somehow misuse Apple's confidential information in the prosecution of this pending patent application. Nevertheless, Samsung understands it is a high priority of both parties to protect their confidential information, so Samsung further proposes that in exchange for Apple withdrawing its objections to Mr. Lucente, Samsung's outside counsel will agree not to show Mr. Lucente any documents or materials related to Apple's graphical user interface utility patents or technologies, such as source code. Indeed, Mr. Lucente is a design expert and will not be opining on those issues, so it was never Samsung's or Mr. Lucente's intention for him to receive technical materials.

Please confirm by Monday, February 13, that Apple will withdraw its objections to Mr. Lucente on the above stated grounds. If not, please identify what specific and legitimate concerns Apple still has regarding Mr. Lucente's access to design-related materials and what specific limitations Apple believes are necessary to resolve this concern so that the issue can be addressed appropriately at the lead counsel meet and confer on Tuesday.

Sincerely,

/s/ Albert P. Bedecarré
